Presidents since the time of John Quincy Adams have not been shy about airing their views concerning the Fourth Estate. But Adams, while not specific, at least narrowed the field of his complaint to "eight or 10 newspapers of extensive circulation published in various parts of the Union acting in close concert with each other and pouring forth continual streams of slander upon my character and reputation, public and private. No falsehood is too broad, and no insinuation too base, for them . . ."

PRESIDENT TRUMAN

President Cleveland also had his press troubles, and history admits he got a rough deal. One summer when he was governor of New York and was sweating it out at Albany, New York newspapers reported him as taking his ease at Newport.

Sometimes the newsmen do let their spleen get into their reporting, but for the most part, they follow Kipling's advice and go on the basis that you can't do a good job unless ". . . you keep your head when all about you, are losing theirs and blaming it on you."

Television may achieve what the less vivid reports conveyed by print or the spoken word cannot. Republican leaders, realizing this, sent out some pretty strict orders on that subject before their recent convention in this city. The orders were revealed by that all-seeing, all-hearing monitor of stage, screen and radio, "Variety."

Republican delegates were told not to be seen (by the eye of the television camera and thereby millions of other eyes) talking to members of delegations from other states lest the suspicious public smell a deal in the making. If they must huddle they were told to huddle unseen.

Delegates also were warned not to assume awkward positions on the floor lest televiewers deduce that handsome isn't as handsome doesn't. And most of all, they were warned not to be seen leaving early and coming late. Not overly hopeful that orders would be followed, monitors were appointed.

Since I couldn't see much of the video product, because, as a reporter I had to keep my eyes on the televiewers themselves, I can't say how well the Republicans comported themselves when televised, nor can I assay how well the Democrats, currently in the spotlight, profited by what they saw of Republican video performances last month

And if either didn't perform with all the grace and decorum nobody can be blamed but themselves. The cameraman gets off easy. The writer and the broadcaster still will have to duck the slings and arrows of the outraged unfortunate.

IT IS only fitting that the heavyweight championship of the world was decided between two Negroes, since most of the better fighters in the last few years have belonged to the Negro race. I might mention Joe Louis, Joe Walcott, Ray Robinson, Ike Williams, Ezzard Charles, Beau Jack and a few others. The only two white entries I can think of now who belong around the top are Tony Zale and Gus Lesnevich.

"Why is this?" I asked a well-known trainer.

"Here's the trouble," he said. "Most of the white fighters are lazy or yellow. They won't train and they can't take it."

This is a minor detail that the white section might consider. Remember this: "They won't train and they can't take it."

Good white fighters have become about as scarce as the extinct dodo. Zale and Lesnevich are exceptions. So is Willie Pep.

Outside of Zale, Pep and Lesnevich, most of the white fighters that I know are crude, lazy and incompetent. They dislike the training routine or, like Rocky Graziano, they won't learn their trade —how to box. "A right hand will do it," was Rocky's answer. Only it didn't.

Zale is a professional. Graziano isn't. He never will be, except on the financial side. Graziano will never be the pro that Zale is. "Strictly a pro," Francis Albertanti says of Zale. "Graziano? Maybe a semipro. But never a pro."

Citation's Goals

Unless something of a harsh physical nature happens to Calumet's Citation, he is almost certain to reach two coveted goals—

1 To finish the high-money winner of all time—above one million dollars in total purses.

2. To be ranked as the top horse of all time—rated definitely above Man o' War.

There is little doubt of his passing the one million dollar mark unless he breaks a leg or is badly injured. The Calumet star already has slipped by the $544,000 mark, and he is just warming up with such stakes as the Arlington Classic in Chicago and the $100,000 International Gold Cup race, at Belmont on his list.

There is more than $500,000 in big stake purses left on the '48 schedule and Citation is still a young three-year-old.

There will be much baying and braying among many members of the old guard in placing any horse above Man o' War. But don't forget two things—that Man o' War ceased firing as a three-year-old and that Man o' War never won a handicap race. He never ran against older horses—except Sir Barton who, at the time, was badly crippled.

Man o' War was a great race horse. But the big test comes in the handicap division where you might give away weight, where you must carry from 130 to 140 pounds to prove your place. There is no reason to believe Man o' War couldn't have carried this weight.

Citation already has run against older horses and beaten them. Two of these were Armed and Buzfuz in the Seminole handicap.

Citation can finish his three-year-old career on even terms with Man o' War, getting none the best of things. But if he goes on from there into the handicap division to meet older horses, he is almost sure to finish as the greatest race horse this country ever has known.

It is always just as well to wait until a competitor has at least reached the stretch of his career before he is finally judged and placed.

Twenty-Game Pitchers

How many 20-game pitchers, on the winning side, will there be this season? The crop will be extremely thin.

When the 1948 season opened, the leading probabilities included Blackwell, Newhauser, Feller, Lemon, Reynolds, Dobson, Munger, Marchildon, Trout, Sain, Spahn, Jansen and Branca. I could mention one or two others.

How many of these will make it? Blackwell and Feller, two of the favored sons, certainly two of the best, are out of it, unless they finish like a brace of Citations.

Blackwell with a bad arm, has three victories out of eight starts. At this time last year Ewell, the lone pine, was on his way to 16 straight.

Feller has been battling to break even. It might also be noted that Feller has been driven from the field of glory seven times, at least, in less than two months.

Hal Newhouser drew the roughest start of the bunch, losing four of his first five games. But the scrappy and skillful Tiger put on a hot rally and proceeded to win seven in a row. He still has an outside chance to reach the olive crowned circle.

Red Munger of the Cardinals has been one of the season's major disappointments. Picked as a 25-game winner, big, strong and fast, the ex-army officer has been below par most of the year.

Broadway Heartbeat

Faces About Town: Mrs. Andrei Gromyko coming out of the swank Colony restaurant where only capitalists can afford the tariff . . . Powers model Gregg Sherwood trying on her trousseau at Wilma's for her merger to Walter Sherwin, the paint billionaire . . . The guests will include Powersirens and the N Y. Yankees team . . Dwight Eisenhower getting the Big Hello from the crowd as he comes out of the Paramount building and enters his car. License No. DE-111 . . . Mrs. Wendell Willkie, who "will appreciate a retraction" of the rumor she might remarry.

A new series of stamps, showing the heads of Gottwald and Zapotocky was issued recently.

"These stamps don't stick," said a Czech.

"They stick," explained the other. "But the people insist on spitting on the wrong side!"

Broadway Story: Her name is Barbara Nunn . . . Pretty as a movie star . . . Monte Proser, in H'wood casting "Heaven on Earth," kept her waiting in the outer office for three hours one day . . . When he finally sent for her to audition she flipped an arm at him in the "oh, nuts" manner and fled . . . She returned the next day, however, did her Lily Pons stuff and won the leading lady role . . . "Now tell me something," said Monte after signing her up. "Why did you dash out of here yesterday that way?" . . . "Because," she explained, "I live at the Studio club where if you're not in by six you don't eat!"

Sallies in Our Alley: Some actors dining at Lum Fong's wondered how drama critic George Jean Nathan spends his summer holiday . . . "He goes to the country and takes long walks," someone offered . . . "Really?" said a listener. "Where does he find the aisles?". . . Lana Turner, the papers said, had bought a farm and Irving Hoffman inquires: "What's she gonna do—raise her own rice?"

A wag at Club 78 was telling about the two drunks looping the loops and zigging the zags on a Coney Island roller coaster.

As they completed the hectic tour, one of them said: "I've got a shneakin' shushpicion we took the wrong shtreet-car."

Manhattan Murals: The warning on a truck: "Some people don't look up until they are flat on their backs" . . . The Delancey street clothing store which offers you "airplane values at submarine prices" . . . Two little girls, all in white, taking each other's photo on St. Patrick's steps just after their initial communion . . . Sign in a delicatessen: "If you don't smell it, we ain't got it!"

Jack Pearl tells about the two partners who went fishing. One fell overboard and the other yelled: "Can you float alone?"

The other screamed back: "This is a fine time to talk business!"

Manhattan Midnight: Some of the 42nd street ticket-takers and ushers now tote "equalizers" and the bouncers carry clubs. Too many incidents lately . . Hehehehe: Richard Widmark, the villain sensation in "Kiss of Death," promised pals that H'wood would never type him. (He again will be a hoodlum in his next two films) . . . The movie editor over at This Week (the mag) is located so far down the hall from everyone else that he has "Outer Mongolia" lettered on his office door instead of his name.

C. A. Lejeune, reviewing "Captain Kidd" in "The Sketch," found it tame stuff. She wrote: "The producers have achieved something little short of a miracle—a dull pirate picture . . . The film cannot compare with the lusty vigor of such pirate yarns as 'Captain Blood,' 'The Sea Hawk,' 'The Black Swan' and Douglas Fairbanks' glorious old silent film, 'The Black Pirate'."

The lady critic added this devastating box office wrecker: "Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle of lemonade!"

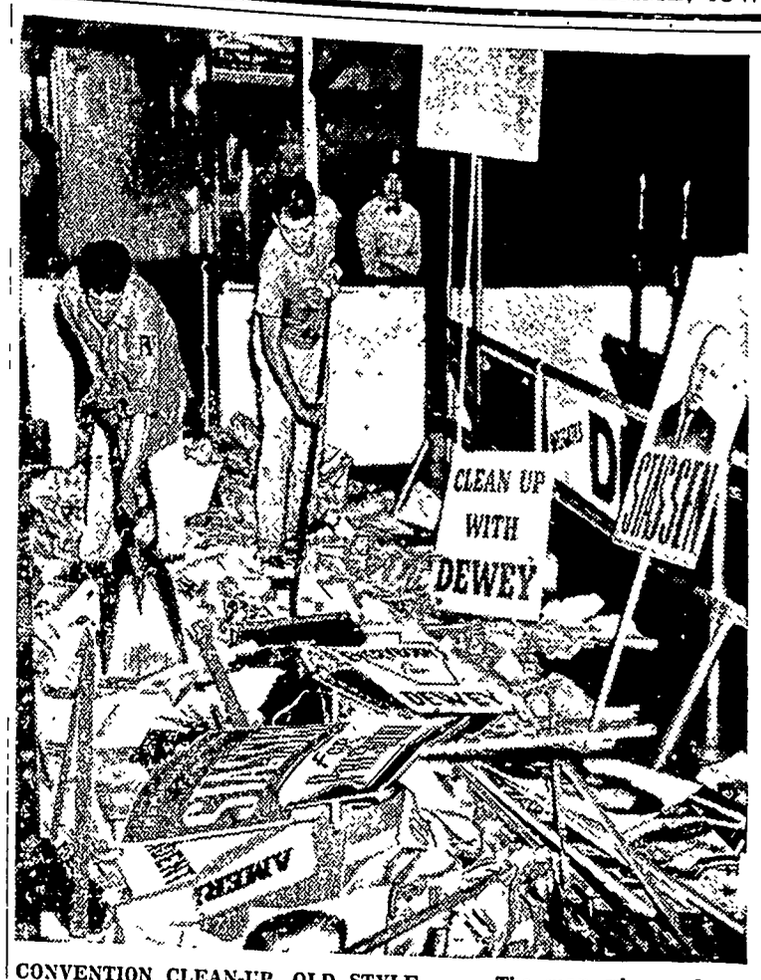
John Newton Baker once told of a ministerial student who interpreted the Biblical story of the creation of woman in this delightful way:

"When God made woman He did not take part of man's brain or part of man's foot but part of his rib. Thus, woman is not to be man's boss or slave but rather the closest thing to his heart."

Addressing a Democratic rally, Paul E. Fitzpatrick hailed the era of Truman prosperity.

He means, of course, all the Trumans prospered.

Aaron Burr, a New Yorker and vice-president of the United States, earned his living as dishwasher in Paris for four years after he held office.



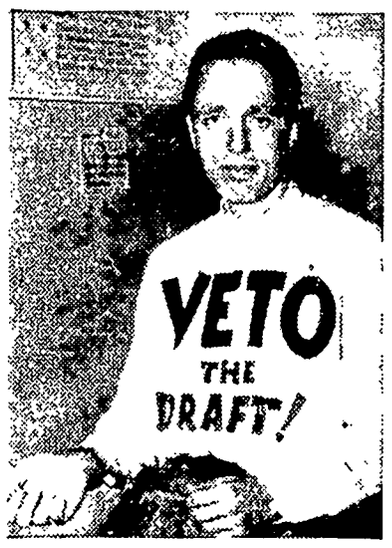
CONVENTION CLEAN-UP, OLD STYLE . . . The man who made the cleanest sweep of them all at the Republican national convention in Philadelphia comes up the aisle—behind a broom. By this time the last weary delegate had left the hall, the emotional sprees marking the naming of seven aspirants to the Republican nomination had ended and the dead trappings of the hectic nominating and voting demonstrations littered the aisles and corridors.

MINE WORKERS WIN PAY BOOST . . . John L. Lewis was in again. After a series of rocky conferences he and the soft coal mine operators announced a new 1948 wage contract providing a dollar-a-day pay increase for 400,000 miners. The agreement, which became effective July 1, also hikes the industry's 10-cent-a-ton contribution to the UMW welfare fund to 20 cents a ton. With Lewis here are James Owens (left), UMW secretary-treasurer, and Thomas Kennedy, UMW vice president.

COMING IN OUT OF THE DRAFT . . . The race was on. Passage by congress of the 19-through-25 peacetime draft bill brought a rush of youths within the susceptible age group to join national guard and reserve units throughout the nation. One provision of the bill exempts members of the national guard or active reserve groups from service in the armed forces.

TWO LITTLE OPTIMISTS FROM EUROPE . . . Janice Hermanson, 2, and Emmi Mattersich, 5, of Norway and Austria respectively sit hopefully on a rock near Rye, N. Y., and watch their fishing lines with interest, confident that any day now they might get a bite. They were two of a group of immigrant children who enjoyed a boating party and picnic given them by the Overseas Aid-United Nations Appeal for Children relief organization.

EMISSARY . . . President Truman has named James Grover McDonald of Bronxville, N. Y., as the first special representative of the U. S. to head the American mission to Israel. McDonald recently has been a member of the Anglo-American commission of inquiry on Palestine.



OBJECTOR . . . James D. Peck of New York City chained himself to a railing in the White House near the East room in dramatic protest against the recently passed draft law.

NOT NOMINATED . . . One of the several men who didn't get the GOP presidential nomination they wanted was Carl C. Countryman, 74-year-old poet and lecturer. Countryman campaigned assiduously for months under the slogan "Countryman for his countrymen, his countrymen for Countryman."

BASEBAWL . . . Although he's not good for any paid admissions, the Pittsburgh Pirates have no more loyal rooter than this 14-year-old chimpanzee at the Highland Park zoo who sports a Pirate cap.

PERMANENT . . . Mrs. Martha Jane Thompson of Valencia, Pa., who recently turned 100, is convinced that a woman should try to look her best at any age. So she got a permanent wave. She says she is opposed to shawls.

Jonathan, Loyal Friend

Lesson for July 25, 1948

WELL might we term this a lesson on the facets of friendship. Rarely will one come upon such a splendid example of friendship in all literature. Coleridge put it well when he wrote, "Friendship is a sheltering tree." Diogenes Laertius, writing on Aristotle, says, "He was once asked what a friend is, and his answer was, 'One soul abiding in two bodies'."

Dr. Newton

Such was the friendship of Jonathan and David — a sheltering tree—one soul abiding in two bodies. Although Jonathan's father attempted at least ten times to kill David, Jonathan was drawn the closer to David, with whose soul his was knit.

The record of this friendship is found in our scripture and devotional readings for the lesson, with the golden text from Proverbs 17:17, "A friend loveth at all times."

A PRINCE SHARES WITH A SHEPHERD

JONATHAN was the crown prince apparent. David was a shepherd boy Saul expected to place Jonathan on the throne. God had selected David.

Jonathan would, no doubt, have made a better king than Saul, his father but he had no desire to be king when he discovered the kingly qualities in his friend, David. Not once did Jonathan ever indicate any disappointment in not becoming king

JONATHAN STANDS UP FOR HIS FRIEND

WHEN Saul openly plotted the death of David, Jonathan begged his father to reconsider his course and spare the life of the man who had killed Goliath and had proved himself the valiant friend of Saul. This was the final test of Jonathan's sacrificial love for David. He might have remained silent, thus aiding in the death of the one man who stood between him and the throne. But Jonathan was made of the stout texture which counts no sacrifice too dear for a friend He was willing to stand up and be counted when it meant that he would not become king. Thus we see that true friendship is not always easy It usually is very costly, but it pays big dividends in the coin of eternal wealth.

FRIENDSHIP THAT COSTS

AND like as Jonathan stood up and witnessed his lasting friendship for David, at a very great cost. so are we today summoned to this ennobling type of friendship for Christ. "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you," he once said.

Young people find it rather costly to be loyal friends of Christ today. There are many siren voices that invite young people to take the low road—social drinking, gambling devices of one sort and another, satisfaction of sensual desires But the true friend of Christ will withstand these voices, choosing rather the high road of Christian gentlemen.

SACRIFICIAL FRIENDSHIP

"FRIENDSHIP is the loveliest flower in the garden of humanity," according to my cherished friend, Dr. Hight C. Moore. I would add this thought—true friendship flowers in the garden of humanity, but it finds its life in the Garden of God's Perfect Eden.

I have not known one single friendship that has impressed me that did not stem from above. "How can two walk together except they be agreed?" And the only cement that will hold human hearts together—one soul in two bodies—is the grace of God.

"Friendship is as God, who gives and asks no payment," said Richard Hovey, and not until the human will is yielded to the will of God, even as was the will of Jonathan, can sacrificial friendship come to flower and to harvest.

Poultry or Play House

IN RESPONSE to many who have requested information that would simplify building a small, general purpose backyard house, I designed the unit illustrated herewith.

It can be built 4 feet by 8 feet, 8 feet by 8 feet, 8 feet by 12 feet, or any number of additional 4-foot length units. To conserve lumber, its outside sheathing consists of non-critical asbestos and cement board, available at your local lumber yard.

Patterns are supplied for cutting the angles of each piece of lumber. User merely cuts lumber according to length each pattern piece indicates, saws and assembles. The platform, back, front and sides are first built as individual sections, then nailed together. Complete list of materials, step by step instructions, numbered assembly illustrations included.

Send 50 cents for Pattern No. 51 to East-Built Pattern Co., Dept. W, Pleasantville, N. Y.

Secretaries Have "Good Chance"

It is reasoned that well trained and well groomed secretaries have excellent marriage prospects because they work so closely with men. Secretaries need not dress expensively, like show girls, to impress an employer but they should be crisp looking at all times. To be avoided are, glaring nail polish, short sleeves, chewing gum, skimpy skirts, seductive necklines, high heels and jewelry that jangles, says the director of a secretarial school.

MUSIC MOTHERS WORK FOR NEW BAND UNIFORMS

The Music Mothers are working very hard to earn and collect money to buy uniforms for the boys and girls in the band.

Several ladies made a canvas of main street last Wednesday and received one hundred and thirty-five dollars. The amount still needed before uniforms can be purchased is one thousand dollars.

We should all be proud of the good showing the High School band has made They won a first rating in the State contest and as a community we could show our appreciation for their efforts by each contributing a few dollars so they could have uniforms.

The following business places and individuals have already made the donations listed:

Harriet Oxley Completes 2nd Year As Hancock County Nurse

NURSE COMPLETES SECOND YEAR IN COUNTY

July 15th, 1948 marked the end of the second year of Public Health Nursing Service in Hancock County

The nurse made 708 home and office visits this year Breaking this total down, we find that 9 visits were made in the interests of communicable diseases, 20 for venereal diseases, 30 tuberculosis visits, 67 visits to maternity cases, 252 visits to infants and preschool children, 144 visits to homes in the interests of School children, 80 visits to crippled children, and 64 visits to sick in the homes.

Many special programs were possible this year The County Public Health Council, composed of representatives from all the agencies interested in health, met every two months and planned programs to best fit the county health needs Other groups as Red Cross, Legion Auxiliary, Farm Bureau, PTA's, Service organizatons and other local agencies offered assistance in meeting health needs.

The local doctors in each community served at eight immunization clinics. About 1500 children were protected against diphtheria and smallpox. As near as we can figure, we have 76 percent of our rural children protected against diphtheria in contrast to 55 percent last year, the per cent of those protected against smallpox has increased from 43 percent to 69 percent this year Certainly the cases of diphtheria in Hancock County this past year proved to us that we must immunize our children and renew it periodically with the popular "booster" dosage

Our tuberculosis x-ray programs slated for August 4th in Britt furnishes x-rays for all those people who have had tuberculosis or ever been in contact with it, and people referred by their physician The County Home people will also be x-rayed on this date.

Our effort to reach more maternity patients this year was realized. Young mothers prove to be interested in nursing visits and learning all they can about infant and child care. One motherhood class series was held in Klemme, with an average attendance of twenty.

Many more visits were made to infants and preschool children to discuss the value of continued medical supervision, adequate diet, immunizations, and dental care as soon as the baby teeth are all erupted

Nine preschool conferences were conducted in April for the children, aged two to six. Dr. Hoffman, from the Dental Hygiene Bureau, examined the children's teeth and recommended dental care as needed. Those children starting school are to have dental and medical checkups by family dentist and doctor before starting school.

The school program had several aspects this past year. Besides the immunization program, a speech and dental program was also sponsored Sixty speech cases were seen by the state worker. We know how very important adequate speech can be to a child. Conferences with schoolroom teacher and parents can help a great deal in understanding a child's speech defect and in correcting it The worker will return in September.

The dental card response increased 29 percent in the rural schools and 24 percent in the town schools. Dental health is a part of good physical health and if we are going to do the best by our children's health, must have regular dental supervision

The schools in the county number about 80, so it is readily appreciated that the classroom teacher is relied upon to report health conditions to the nurse The teachers are making fine observations, and are doing a splendid job as evidenced from the dental results and parade.

The nurse made many talks to a variety of groups. We are happy to know that these groups are interested in being more familiar with the nursing service aims. Eight radio programs over KGLO were participated in this year.

Many more children were seen in this year's crippled children's clinic in Forest City in June—49 cases were seen—including children with rheumatic fever, diabetes, or any crippling condition

A nursing student received experience with the Hancock County Service. She is now a County Nurse in Wright County Another nurse is spending July and August gaining experience in our county before beginning work in Greene County.

The nurse's office has been moved to much improved quarters on the second floor of the Courthouse, telephone 350.

Great progress has been made this year, chiefly due to the added interest and support of local organizations Until the people know how the nurse can serve, and call upon her for this service, the greatest good can not be felt. Several new programs are planned for the ensuing year.

On Friday evening a group of men from Klemme gathered finished shocking the oats. at the Nannenga farm and Albert Kehl served the men dinner at the Roths' Cafe in Klemme.

Lunch was served in he afternoon by Mrs. Herman Baack, Mrs. Abert Kehl, Mrs. John Ball and Miss Ruth Holck

THRESHING GOT UNDER WAY FIRST OF WEEK IN THIS COMMUNITY

The annual harvest season is here and the first threshing rings went to work in a number of neighborhoods around Klemme Monday Besides the threshing rings at work harvesting oats, combines began threshing out windrows of grain last week

With continued good weather there will be a lot of grain in the farmers' bins by the end of this week.

Quite a number of fields of grain that have been combined have been or are in the process of baling The straw is of good quality this year and much of it is being baled.

SMALL GRAIN HARVESTING IS WELL UNDER WAY HERE

Oats Yield And Quality Is Generally Reported Good Here

Harvesting of oats is pretty well along in this community. Most all of the fields have been cut and either shocked or windrowed for combining. Quite a number of fields have already been combined with good yields and quality reported. In most cases the oats is not quite as heavy as last year, but the quality is very good.

Corn Is Tasseled

Corn made rapid strides skyward during the hot days and nights of a week ago and as we go to press most corn fields are well tasseled out and the ears nicely forming.

Hybrid seed corn fields are being de-tasseled and 39 women, boys and girls, go daily to the fields around Belmond to help with de-tasseling work.

Soy beans are looking good at this time and the prospect for an abundant yield looks promising. There are more than the usual number of acres planted to soy beans this year Many farmers have doubled their acreage this year and in most cases they have increased their acreage over former years. Soy beans are rapidly becoming a major crop in North Iowa

GRANDMA SUCKOW DIED JULY 21 AT THE HOME OF HER DAUGHTER

Aged Woman Had Spent Most Of Her Life In This Community

Funeral services for Grandma Taldine Suckow were held at the Klemme Methodist Church on Friday afternoon, July 23 with Rev Herschel E. Harvey delivering the funeral sermon.

Mrs. Suckow was one of the early settlers of this community and had spent most of her life in this community, and the family resided on a farm in Liberty township for many years.

Mrs. Suckow was carried to her final resting place in the Ell Township cemetery near Klemme by her grandsons Dale Suckow, Gordon Suckow, Luther Suckow, Milton Paul, Wesley Suckow and Arnett Waddingham.

Rev. Harvey read the obituary which appears on this page

NEW SODA FOUNTAIN INSTALLED AT THE CORNER STORE

Ray Jorgenson Jr. installed a new, modern electric soda fountain in the Corner Store Tuesday. The fountain is the very latest in design and is automatically refrigerated so that the fountain drinks will be ice cold. It is equipped with both cold and hot water for washing of glassware.

The new fountain is a fine improvement at the store and with this new fountain customers will be able to have the very best in sundaes and sodas and other fountain drinks.

The store was also recently redecorated, some booths installed and fixtures re-arranged to give it "the new look."

OBITUARY OF MRS. TALDINE SUCKOW, 86

Taldine Magarothe Suckow was born December 17, 1861 at Bunderhee, Germany, the eldest of a family of ten children born to her parents John B and Catherine Brouwer.

At the age of eight, Taldine moved to America with her parents, they farmed for a while in Hardin County near Eldora, and then moved to Hancock County. Here the Brouwer family took root, and stayed as this seemed to be, and still is, a grand spot for a farmer to build his home and live a happy life.

In November 1887, two years after the Liberty Methodist Church was built, Taldine Brouwer and Henry L. Suckow were married by the Rev. J. J. Spicker. They established a farm home a mile south of the Liberty Church, broke the prairie sod, built a few buildings, dug a well, planted a grove, and continued to improve their farm year after year.

Here, Henry and Taldine Suckow were a part of Liberty Township life for 32 years. Henry Suckow, besides his farming was Justice of the Peace, and held various offices for the township, for the school and for the church.

Taldine Suckow was always smiling and happy. She was blessed with good health, and accepted the job of rearing seven children most willingly, and seemed to think her neighbors were all grand people, and thus, thru all of her long life she had many friends.

In 1919 - Henry and Taldine Suckow retired from the farm and moved to Klemme. Thirteen years later, in 1932, the husband Henry Suckow passed away. Since then Taldine has made her home with the Herman Paul family.

Some weeks ago, Taldine Suckow suffered a hip fracture, from which she would have recovered, but, it seemed her time had come, and she became very tired and fell asleep Wednesday morning, July 21, 1948. Age 86 years, 7 months and 4 days.

She leaves of her immediate family:

Seven children:

Etna, Mrs. Herman Paul, Garner R-3
John H Suckow, Klemme, Iowa
Mae, Mrs. Lawrence Schaefer, Milwaukee, Wisconsin
Carl Suckow, Jennings, La.
Rev. Will M. Suckow, Van Meter, Ia.
Louis Suckow, Mason City, Iowa
Henry Suckow, Klemme, Iowa.

One sister:

Mrs. Henry Stromer, Dallas, Oregon.

Two brothers:

Ralph Brouwer, Waseca, Minn.
Will Brouwer, Garner, Iowa.

Also 14 grand children and 6 great grand children.

TELEVISION COMMERCIALS

It strikes this department that the TV (television to you) commercial is tough on the great unseen and unpitied audience It gives you not only the salestalk but close-ups of the product. It throws the book, bottle, tin can, carton, container and crate at you.

Take your radio straight and you get a talk on shortening, but take it by video and you get television views of the bread, cake and pies, profile, full view and sliced. You see the hair tonic in the photogenic bottle; the cigarette comes bouncing into the living room alive and dropping the ashes.

To hear about a cake of soap is one thing; to have to watch it as it takes form is another. Cereals, stogies and salad oils are not so hard when heard, but there is a question about them as a movie screen double feature.

There was this to be said about the old-fashioned radio: You could imagine the announcer was easy on the eyes. It was easier to close your ears than your eyes. If we went to the movies and the big scene was held up by a few special shots of a can of lard, a nutbar factory or a close-up of a chocolate layer cake, view from all angles, we would squawk

Elmer Twitchell is especially hostile. "I object to my home being made a showroom for the assorted products of American industry," he declares. "Why should my den be converted into a commercial exposition hall and my parlor made a sales manager's delight?

"TV is young and a seventh wonder. Its sheer wizardry is appealing. I appreciate being able to get pictures via the airways with a mere twisting of the dials, but I call for a little toning down of the illustrated commercials. When the liver pill, the frankfurter, the gasoline and the tooth paste were heard and not seen, it pleased me better.

"Nothing exasperates me more than to struggle with the dials to bring in a ball game clearly and get a lovely movie of a carton of soap flakes When I want to see a prize fight I want a picture of the pugilists, not the Lever brothers. This emphasis on commercials by video comes at a time when the radio industry claims to have come out for shorter commercials. What goes?"

Mrs. Twitchell tells us that Elmer is a wreck over television anyhow. (He lives in the suburbs where he has to have an outside aerial of such size it makes his bungalow look like a naval station, she says. And Elmer insists that planes mistake his house for a beacon.)

"But the illustrated commercials are what unnerve him," says Mrs. Twitchell. "Me? Well, a jingle is certainly harder on the nerves when I see the perpetrators."

VANISHING AMERICANISMS:

"We can rent a rowboat all day for a dollar."

"He doesn't make much money but he never complains."

"Here's a boy to mow the lawn for 50 cents."

"Got two cents for a stamp?"

"I know where you can get a good used car cheap."

"Here's a nickel; buy yourself an ice cream cone."

"Go ahead and order anything you want; the check here won't be much."

Siamese gunmen stole two million dollars of international gold the other day. A million for each twin.

HOUSING SOLUTION

There was an old woman
She lived in a shoe . . .
She had a better house
Than I have or you.

'Twas just so much footwear
A boot, so to speak,
But it held up okay,
And the thing didn't leak.

Elmer Twitchell says he hears that at that tavern to be run by Mrs. Roosevelt and Elliott you can put a nickel in the juke box and get back 20 cents, a musical recording, a sandwich, and somebody else's coat and hat.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: What size mesh should be used for gutters, and what kind would be impervious to corrosion?

ANSWER: A quarter-inch mesh, which would keep most of the leaves out of the gutter in case there are trees close to the house. Copper is impervious to corrosion.

QUESTION: When the former tenants moved from here they scored the floors with their furniture. Is there any way I can remove the score marks?

ANSWER: Scraping with an electric floor sanding machine should take out most of the marks. If any slight hollow place remains after sanding, you may be able to make them less noticeable by building them up with several thin coats of a quick-drying varnish.

QUESTION: Can you tell me what causes the hot water faucet to vibrate with a disturbing noise when it is turned on?

ANSWER: Since the noise occurs only when the faucet is on, the trouble may be from a worn-out washer or some loose part in the faucet. Also, there is a possibility that you are overheating the water.

QUESTION: How can I remove varnish from my linoleum rug?

ANSWER: Sponge with a lukewarm solution of trisodium phosphate using about 3 pounds to the gallon of water. Let the solution stay on long enough to soften the varnish, then take up with fine steel wool. Rinse thoroughly.

QUESTION: My indirect heater is connected to the boiler, but my hot water is only luke-warm. What is the matter?

ANSWER: If you were getting hot water and the condition has developed recently, it is possible the heater jacket is clogged with sediment and may have to be taken apart and cleaned.

High Death Rate on Farms

Farm workers had an accidental death rate twice as high as workers in non-agricultural industries in 1947. The 1947 death rate was 52 per 100,000 workers, while in non-agricultural industries the death rate was 26. Total farm resident deaths were 19,500, about the same as last year. Injuries totaled about 1,800,000. Farm home deaths totaled 7,000, with approximately 1,050,000 non-fatal injuries. Motor vehicles killed 7,300 farm residents in 1947 and injured 250,000 more.

Have the jars and covers washed and sterilized. The jars may be inverted on a clean towel after sterilizing, so they'll be in readiness to fill.

Have water in the pressure cooker. You can start this heating as soon as you come in because there's not very much water needed. Naturally, you have checked the pressure cooker previously to make certain it closes properly and that the pressure gauge works too.

Cleaning equipment such as kettles and colanders, paring knives and other things also should be ready.

WASH FOODS before cutting, stemming or hulling. You'll probably need several changes of water for absolute cleanliness. Handle the vegetables gently and lift them out of the water rather than pouring it off them. Discard any spoiled vegetables during washing.

Try to use the same sized pieces for each jar. Those vegetables which are outsized may be cut up rather than canned whole.

Then prepare as necessary for each vegetable, cutting green beans, shelling peas, scraping carrots, et cetera.

Precook or blanch (immerse in hot water) long enough to shrink or wilt the vegetables to get a better pack. Vegetables may be placed in a cheesecloth sack and immersed in boiling water.

Fill sterile jars to within one inch of the top. Then add boiling water to within one-half inch of the top. One teaspoon of salt to each quart also may be added before the water is poured in.

Adjust lids according to manufacturers' directions.

Place the rack in the bottom of the pressure cooker and set the jars on it. Leave a little space between the jars so that the steam can circulate freely. Only enough jars to fit in the pressure cooker should be prepared at one time.

Adjust the pressure cooker cover and screw down the safety valve. Steam should be allowed to escape only through the petcock.

Allow the petcock to remain open from seven to 10 minutes, counting from the time the steam begins to escape steadily. Close the petcock.

Allow the pressure to come within two or three pounds of the desired amount, then lower heat. This prevents overshooting the desired pressure mark.

Count processing time from the moment the gauge registers the desired pounds of pressure. Have pressure remain as constant as possible so you neither overcook or underprocess your food.

Jars may be removed with a lifter onto layers of newspapers or cloth. Keep them away from drafts.

Beets which do not have an even distribution of coloring usually will have better color if pared, cut and precooked for five minutes before canning. They reabsorb color when handled this way.

If your canned corn has a brownish cast, this usually is due to carmelization. Prevent this by using juicy corn, plenty of water and correct processing.

Choosing the vegetables carefully and careful handling will give desired results in home-canning.

THE FICTION CORNER

BANDBOX BETTY

By MARY KEMPE CHEATHAM

HEAT shimmered from the downtown pavements. Torrid light fell in bars through the Venetian blinds in Mr. Humphreys' private office, carrying with it a coppery odor, like that of a penny clutched too long in a perspiring palm. It was a hot day all right, and the city lay panting under the noonday sun.

"Leave the door open, Miss Barclay," called Mr. Humphreys, as Betty returned from lunch. "Let the air circulate." "Whew," he added, mopping his brow, "we've got to get some air conditioning in this hotbox."

Betty smiled, removing her white gloves and her crisp white hat. Mr. Humphreys said the same thing every summer. She laid her gloves and white purse neatly away in the bottom desk drawer and sat down at the typewriter. With her blonde hair sleek and smooth and her pale green dress miraculously unwrinkled, she looked as cool and fresh as an iced limeade.

"How do you do it, Miss Barclay!" marveled Mr. Humphreys, entering the cubicle of an outer office where she sat as secretary and receptionist. "You can't be as cool as you look! Anyhow, let's put this fan out here somewhere to stir up a little breeze."

He looked around vaguely, pulled out a chair a few feet from Betty's desk, set the fan on it, plugged in the cord and returned to his own large desk through the open door marked Private.

Betty gazed doubtfully at the fan whirring away on the chair before her. She anchored the fluttering papers on her desk with paperweights, and, with a little frown of annoyance, smoothed back the tendrils of hair which were beginning to blow loose from the bun at the nape of her neck. She caught Mr. Humphreys looking at her and smiled. After all, Mr. Humphreys was the boss. If he wanted to go around putting electric fans on chairs, it was no business of hers. Anyway, Mr. Humphreys was nice. Nice, and quite, quite happily married.

They were all quite happily married, thought Betty with a sigh, as she began on her transcription. All the really nice members of the office force in the other departments, all the nicest salesmen. That business of romance in an office was just something you read about in magazines.

"Is Mr. Humphreys in?"

She looked up as a tall, broad-shouldered, red-haired young man strolled toward her desk and thrust a business card into her hand. Before she knew what was happening, he had pulled up his trouser legs slightly, to preserve their meticulous crease, and had begun to assume a sitting position over the whirring fan.

"Don't sit down!" Betty shrieked, simultaneously with Mr. Humphreys' shout.

The young man catapulted away from the chair as though a bomb suddenly had sprung from the fan blades. Backed against Betty's desk, he stared, then grinned. Mr. Humphreys, flown to the rescue, was mopping his brow again, but not from heat.

"That," he said, shakily, "was a narrow escape." He disconnected the fan and stood, bewilderedly, holding it.

Her composure regained now that catastrophe had been averted, Betty became once more all cool efficiency. She glanced at the card. She chuckled. She could not help it.

"Would you," she asked, "have had coverage for THAT?"

The card read, "John J. Thomas, Insurance."

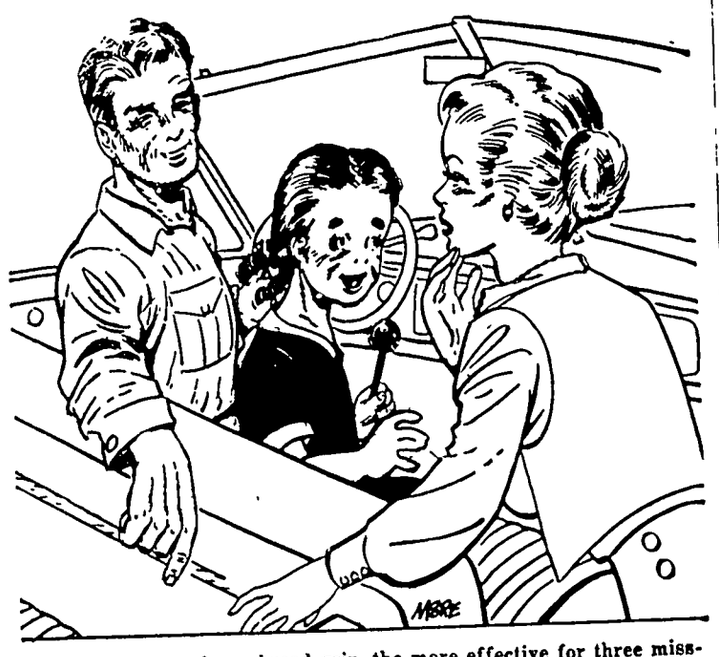
The young man chuckled, too. "I came here," he remarked, "to talk to Mr. Humphreys about accident insurance."

"Sure, sure," murmured Mr. Humphreys, still shaken. "Come right in. Have one of the boys put that thing on a bracket for you," he said to Betty, indicating the fan.

When they emerged from Mr. Humphreys' sanctum, John Thomas had a pleased expression on his face and, no doubt, a policy in the bag.

"It was really her fault, you know," he remarked to Mr. Humphreys, loitering at the door. "She looked so cool, I didn't even see that chair."

"Miss Barclay always looks cool in summer," said Mr. Humphreys proudly, "and neat all the year 'round."



Muggsy gave her a broad grin, the more effective for three missing teeth. "You're pretty," she said. "I like you."

Betty flushed. She had had the expression applied to her before. Since her first days with the company, she knew she had been familiarly referred to by the other employees as "Bandbox Betty," but it was disconcerting to be discussed in this fashion.

"The least she can do," he teased, "is give me a dinner date."

"That's fair enough," echoed Mr. Humphreys, "if it's all right with Miss Barclay."

"Well," conceded Betty, "but I warn you, I have all the insurance I need."

Dinner with John Thomas was distinctly pleasant. It was cool in the Orchid room and the table appointments were perfect. The floor show was good, the food even better. From cocktail to parfait, the courses were faultless. John himself met every requirement as an escort. Betty began to be glad Mr. Humphreys had put the fan on a chair.

"Not a hair out of place," John commented.

"They drill it into you," countered Betty, "at secretarial school. White collars, tidy fingernails, all that."

"I'LL BET," John said, suddenly, eyes twinkling, "YOU WOULDN'T EVEN GET MUSSED AT A PICNIC!"

She had a number of dates with John, their tempo always smooth and pleasant. Her work suffered no misplaced commas, Mr. Humphreys was happy, John seemed happy and Betty was almost happy. Only—that was all that ever happened. Never once had John attempted to kiss her or even hold her hand. He was, she concluded finally, a confirmed bachelor.

"Just as I," she thought, poking savagely at the typewriter keys, "am a confirmed old maid."

It was a Saturday, almost noon quitting time. John had not called, and the future suddenly became a whole series of weary calendar pages, neatly torn off day by day and deposited in the wastebasket.

As she walked from the building, there was John's convertible parked at the entrance.

"Get in," he called, "we're going on a picnic!"

It was amazing how his red hair could brighten up the day! Betty was happily in the car before she even noticed his female companion. "Oh!" she gasped. For there, huddled between John and a bulging picnic basket, was a startling apparition—a little girl with freckles, wide blue eyes and the same red hair!

"Relax," smiled John. "Muggsy is just my niece. Every year, about this time, I take her on a picnic."

"Oh," said Betty again, uncertainly. Muggsy gave her a broad grin, the more effective for three missing teeth. "You're pretty," she said. "I like you." She climbed into Betty's lap and settled herself with a comfortable sigh. "You've got a pretty dress," she added, stroking it with a hand which was just a trifle grimy. Betty looked down at her wrinkled skirt, but under the child's weight it could not be straightened. John, busy with getting the convertible out of the Saturday traffic, appeared not to notice. He looked different in wash trousers and sports shirt. Muggsy, too, wore a washable print dress. Betty ruefully considered her office apparel but made no comment.

As they drove, the wind whipped at Betty's hair. She had no net and all she could do was keep pinning the strands back in place. When they reached the picnic spot, Muggsy jumped up and down in delight. "C'n I wade, Uncle John, c'n I wade?" she called, casting off shoes and socks and stepping into the creek. "I'm going to look for crawdads," she declared, peering stealthily under rocks in the shallow stream, now and then letting her dress tail dribble in the water.

Betty was gazing into a pocket mirror, trying to smooth her hair. "Come help me," John called, piling twigs in a little rock fireplace. "You unpack the lunch, while I build a fire to make the coffee and broil the steaks."

The fire smoked, ashes fell into the coffee, the charred stick forks made smudges. Betty did her best to stay neat, but Muggsy was everywhere at once, dribbling steak-juice, mustard and catsup. A stinging sensation crept behind Betty's eyelids as she recalled John's admiring words, "I'LL BET YOU WOULDN'T EVEN GET MUSSED AT A PICNIC." She pulled ineffectually at her wrinkled frock, dabbed with a handkerchief at stains, wiped the dust from her shoes. It was unfair of John to put her to such a test.

The picnic dragged mercilessly on to an amusement park where Muggsy wanted to ride a roller coaster. Betty shuddered. She hated roller coasters, she hated flying turns, but she found herself hurtling through space with John and Muggsy in any number of crazy fashions. When they emerged, her bun was quite gone, the blonde hair hanging loosely about her shoulders. Her shoes were full of shavings from the amusement park grounds, she had a run in her hose and her face was smudged and devoid of makeup.

John stared at her and laughed aloud. "What," he asked, "has become of Bandbox Betty?"

Someone, she thought, should slap his face, but before she could put the impulse into effect, he had seized her hands and pulled her close. To her amazement, he kissed her fiercely, before all the people in the amusement park, with Muggsy giggling at them both. Everything seemed to fade away as she kissed back.

"That," he breathed, "is more like it."

"I couldn't have stood it," he said, "to have you respond with nothing but a neat little peck."

Jay Walking Dangerous

That short distance to the corner goes a long way toward keeping people alive, American pedestrians are warned by safety experts striving to reduce the huge annual traffic death toll by curbing unsafe pedestrian acts. Approximately 11,000 persons are run down and killed by motor vehicles every year—and half of them are crossing streets and rural roads between intersections. Coming from behind parked cars and crossing the street at places other than designated crosswalks are the most dangerous things the man on foot can do in traffic, according to the accident prevention department, Association of Casualty and Surety companies. Jaywalking killed over 3 200 and injured 51,000 pedestrians in this country in 1947, the department pointed out. Walking in the roadway and crossing against the traffic signal are the next most important reasons why so many persons lose their livos or are crippled for life.

TOMORROW'S BRIDGE
Grace Noll Crowell
TOMORROW'S bridge as I look ahead
Is a rickety thing to view;
Its piers are crumbled, its rails are down,
Its floor would let me through.
The chasm it spans is dark and deep,
And the waters foam and fret;
I have crossed that bridge a thousand times
Though I never have reached it yet.
It has crashed beneath me to let me through,
Although it is miles away;
But strange, the bridges that I have crossed
Have all been safe today.
Perhaps I shall find when I reach that one
That lies in the distant blue,
Some hand may have mended its rickety floor
And its piers may be strong and new.

MAKES THE FLAVOR? — Bossie loves sweet-corn! But the first bite, what do folks go for? BUTTER, of course, the crowning touch of flavor. Butter adds energy, too, it's rich in vitamins we all need, especially Vitamin A. Yes, the matchless flavor of butter does so much for the appetite appeal of other foods. Its natural golden color comes from rich golden cream — and it takes four pints of cream to make a pound of butter. For nutrition, for health, for downright goodness, Butter is still a great value.

TO OUR MEMBERS AND PATRONS

Dear Patron:

For the past year your directors have been alarmed at our rising book accounts. Each month larger amounts were being "CHARGED". This increase was taking such a large portion of our regular working capital that it was being increasingly difficult to finance your business. This situation was brought up for discussion at your annual meeting on July 18th. After much discussion on various credit policies and their results, a motion was made from the floor that the Directors establish and carry out the company business on a CASH BASIS with a limited 10 day "Courtesy Credit". This motion was brought to a ballot and by almost a unanimous vote the motion was approved.

Your Board of Directors have instructed me to establish and carry out that motion to become effective August 1, 1948. After that date we will be on a CASH BASIS with a 10 day "Courtesy Credit" to accomodate those where it is not convient to have money on hand when delivery is made by truck or when your employees purchase merchandise for your account. Only ONE Courtesy Credit is allowed. If payment is not made within 10 days no more credit is to be allowed. No credit is to be extended to those with unpaid accounts dating prior to August 1.

We realize this policy will be inconvenient to you at first. With your cooperation we will be able to carry this thing thru to a mutual benefit to all. We trust you give us your full cooperation as you always have in the past.

Respectfully yours,

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Arabs and Jews Go Back to War As U.N. Truce Fails in Palestine; Truman OKs Farm Price Support

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FAILURE:
U.N. Truce

There was not peace, but once more a sword in Palestine. The United Nations truce had failed.

As the four-week interruption of hostilities between Arabs and Jews dragged somberly through its final hours, combatants on both sides were making preparations to resume warfare.

They had failed to come to terms, and that failure arose out of the fact that there had existed no political or social basis upon which a peace agreement could be rested, nor were either the Jews or Arabs particularly eager to create one.

Their attitude throughout the truce negotiations had been that the contest over whether the state of Israel should be allowed to exist must necessarily be a flat, win-or-lose battle with no middle ground solution possible.

Count Folke Bernadotte, U.N. mediator in Palestine, had tried hard, but he had had to carry out his negotiations in what might be termed a spiritual vacuum between the Jews and Arabs. There simply was no meeting of minds upon which he might have capitalized.

Before the truce expired Bernadotte had endeavored to get it extended and continue the negotiations. Israel had agreed to such an extension but the Arab league opposed it.

Previously, during the last days of the truce, the Arabs had rejected a plan submitted by Bernadotte which included an extensive revision of the now defunct U.N. partition scheme.

Bernadotte's proposal would have restored the area of Palestine to what it was before Trans-Jordan was separated from it, and that total area then would have been partitioned into independent Arab and Jewish states.

The plan, as presented, had a ring of desperation in it. It must have been obvious, even to Bernadotte, that the Arabs would not accept such a scheme, particularly since they had violently opposed the original U.N. partition idea.

Trans-Jordan was especially antagonistic to the plan, insisting that it would put the nation under at least partial jurisdiction of the United Nations, thus making it no better than a dependent state.

As Bernadotte and his staff left Palestine guns already were firing and the Holy Land had relapsed into a condition of war.

FARM BILL:
Price Support

To the accompaniment of his now customary blast at the 80th congress President Truman signed into law a farm bill that extends present price support policies for 15 months and establishes a long-range, flexible support program to begin January 1, 1950.

Signing the bill, the President said: "I wish to make it plain once again that legislation for price supports is only part of the action this congress should have taken to meet the problems of American agriculture."

Thus, he was not criticizing the farm price support bill in itself but rather giving another re-run to the familiar theme whereby he has been castigating congress for doing a little when a lot more was needed.

Congress, he said, failed to enact legislation to strengthen the soil conservation program; it did not provide the necessary funds for marketing research; it did not act on the international wheat agreement. It failed, he specified, to meet "the serious problems of rural housing, health and education."

"In the field of agriculture, as in so many others, most of the business of the 80th congress was left unfinished," Mr. Truman observed.

Under the extension bill farm prices generally will be supported at their present levels. However, the support price for cotton will drop from 92½ to 90 per cent of parity.

The idea behind parity farm prices is to insure the farmer the same buying power, compared with the rest of the community, that he had during a favorable crop period. Usually the standard interval upon which parity prices are based are the five years from 1909 to 1914.

Five other basic crops will continue to be supported at 90 per cent of parity. They are wheat, corn, rice, peanuts and tobacco.

Spending Money

As the economic cooperation administration closed its Marshall plan books on the first three months of its operation it reported that recovery shipments worth $762,747,140 were approved for Europe and China during that period.

That total is about 58 per cent of the goal originally set for the quarter, but ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman said the unspent balance would be used eventually.

Stage Manager

Rep. Hugh D. Scott Jr. of Pennsylvania has been chosen by Republican leaders as the national chairman to lead the party in the forthcoming presidential campaign. Scott is 47, a World War II veteran and represents the Germantown-Chestnut Hill district of Philadelphia in the house of representatives.

BERLIN:
Trouble

As U. S. planes continued to fly tons of food into beleaguered Berlin the East-West stalemate over Germany was solidifying in a stubborn mold.

The Russian blockade of Berlin had brought the painful German issue to a head, and both the Soviets and the western powers were anticipating that events might begin to move very rapidly soon.

There were these developments:

The Communists announced that they were drawing up a constitution for a German republic and also a two-year plan to link Berlin economically with the Soviet zone.

At the same time, on the free side of the iron curtain, German political leaders were expressing their opposition to the western powers' plans for a West German federal government.

In Berlin, power cuts were ordered in the three western sectors of the city to save the dwindling coal stocks. The action was taken despite the fact that coal shipments had begun to arrive by air.

Key to the situation, perhaps, was the Communist proposal for a new constitution. The Soviet-sponsored German People's Congress of eastern Germany announced that the document would be official. In a statement the group said that "Germany is an indivisible republic made up of states and that executive power stems from the people."

That appeared to bring Soviet intentions more or less out in the open. It means that Russia apparently is determined either to force the western democracies out of Berlin or bludgeon them into an agreement whereby the Soviets would be in virtual control of the city.

REPUBLICAN:
Changes, If

Although the presidency of the United States still is far from a reality for Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, the Republican nominee nevertheless is giving considerable thought to some of the problems that will face him if he does get elected to the office.

If, for instance, he is to make good his promise to sweep out "16 years of Democratic cobwebs" from the federal government, these are some of the tasks he will be expected to perform:

Replace hundreds of officials in Washington and all over the nation with men of his choice who will put his policies into effect.

Establish with congress a coordinated program of policies for all federal departments, both foreign and domestic.

Streamline government functions and eliminate duplications in the present structure of alphabetical agencies and bureaus.

It will be a gigantic task. Policies that a Republican president would have to establish would range through the current conduct of foreign affairs; domestic spending of taxpayers' money; federal relations with private business, labor and industry; housing, veterans, agriculture and social improvements.

Then there will be the matter of choosing a cabinet that will be geographically representative of the entire nation.

PRICES:
Up Again

Consumer's price index, formerly called the cost of living index, for mid-May this year rose .6 per cent above that for mid-April to reach a new all-time high, according to figures released by National Industrial Conference board.

Expressed in 1923 dollars, the purchasing power of the dollar stood at 61.3 cents in May. That represents a drop of .6 per cent from April and 7.4 per cent from June, 1947.

RAILROADS:
No Strike

Federal Judge T. Alan Goldsborough was not a man to stand idly by and watch society disintegrate, as he termed it, so he issued an injunction forbidding a national rail strike.

The injunction was a permanent one replacing the temporary "no strike" order he issued last May after the government had seized the railroads in the face of an impending strike by the three operating brotherhoods.

Justifying his action, Goldsborough said that if he had not issued the order "the whole economic and political system of the nation would be upset."

Although rail unions had protested that a permanent injunction was unnecessary, Goldsborough said they could not be permitted "to adopt a process which will disintegrate society itself." That held true, he pointed out, regardless of whatever merits the union's case might hold.

"Our political influence throughout the world would be done away with, we'd become a laughing stock. To permit a strike of this kind is something society should not be forced to tolerate."

But as the stalemate dragged on the disputants apparently lost some of their zest for the contest.

Finally a series of conferences, arranged by John R. Steelman, presidential assistant, resulted in a more or less amicable settlement. The unions agreed to accept a wage increase of 15½ cents an hour, plus some changes in operating rules.

Chortled President Truman, as he called the labor and management representatives into his office: "You did this on your own hook and I feel very good about it. I congratulate all of you on it."

CYCLES:
Freezing

People who are addicted to th theory that human existence is defined by cycles have made a horrendous prediction: This will be a world of dictators for the next 250 years.

That prognostication was made in a "law of growth of nations," published by the Foundation for the Study of Cycles. This law indicates further that after the period of dictators will come a static or "frozen" civilization.

This "frozen" civilization probably will be a happy one, but it is, nevertheless, doomed to deteriorate. The end is foreseen when younger peoples, eager for the loot of the world, rise to give the coup de grace to the emasculated western powers.

Who these younger peoples are is not revealed. They may be a fresh group of barbarians or near-barbarians who will come sweeping down from the north or up from the south.

Low Finance

In addition to giving Russia a false incentive toward becoming particularly nasty in Berlin, the recent currency revaluation in Germany's western zones caused a certain amount of personal financial confusion also. This German hausfrau turned in her old currency for the new money sponsored by the western powers, receiving 40 new marks for 60 of the old. But the new money will buy as much as the old—she hopes.

Headliners

IN NEW ORLEANS . . . Mrs. Morris Champagne gave birth to a son in Baptist hospital, 24 hours later Mrs. Joseph Liquor had a daughter, 18 minutes after that Mrs. S. R. Staggers was delivered of a daughter.

IN BUTTE . . . Deputy Sheriff Robert Russel was treated for burns on his right forefinger suffered when he was demonstrating the safe way to handle firecrackers to a group of youngsters.

IN KANSAS CITY . . . Clyde E. Paine, a roundhouse worker, unable to sleep since he was transferred from the day to night shift, invented an electric fan that makes a clacking noise like the wheels of a freight train, lulling him into peaceful slumber.

IN MILWAUKEE . . . James Beard put a handful of nickels into a pay telephone, got a wrong number every time, was arrested when he was found walking down the street in a mist of rage with the telephone receiver dangling by the cord wrapped around his neck.

Some Things Are Worse Than Being in the Army

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Less than a month from now the draft will hit young Americans, but it will be a nudge, not a wallop. One of its chief immediate purposes is to deflect the flood of enlistments of young men from the national guard and the reserves to the regular services.

It is expected that so many eligibles will enlist rather than wait until they are invited that only between 200,000 and 250,000 will actually be requested to report or ——.

It isn't at all strange that there is a certain amount of reluctance on the part of so many young Americans to leap to arms the moment they ascertain that their country has decided they are needed. There are no bugles blowing. No foreign tyrant has soiled the nation's honor, there is no visible sign of a "military necessity" to disturb the even tenor of their activities—sandlot, movie, poolroom, work, study or play.

Baukhage

On the contrary, there has been an almost steady anti-military propaganda from all sorts of sources, all the way from the paid agents of the Kremlin to the innocent idealists or the doting mothers who think that if fighting must be indulged in, it certainly should be done by some other mother's boy. The polls show these propagandists are in the minority, but they are a loud minority.

Personally, if I were advising a teen-ager I never would recommend close order drill or tossing together a batch of firing data which would produce almost as many shorts as overs, as the one most terrifically scrumptious method of whiling away a couple of years.

On the other hand, I have had more adulterated pleasure in doing quite a number of things in which were not included learning the multiplication table, cutting the lawn, making a trial balance, working a paper route, translating the chapter which begins "Caesar trans Rhenum pons fecit," or even carving the Thanksgiving turkey the first time "her" relatives came for dinner.

As I say, I can imagine several things many people would rather do than these mentioned, including military service, but having done them, most people are better for it. I admit that for one of a delicate nervous disposition, unable to adjust his personality to groups, carving a turkey for the first time before in-laws might be the worst thing imaginable. It might be the one particular thing that the particular trauma affecting that particular individual couldn't stand. Extreme psychosis might result—even a psychotic condition that would lead to homicide or some other emotional outburst that a stronger psyche could have repressed or sublimated into kicking the dog or dropping molasses on his wife's girdle.

I grant all this freely. There are men so unable to meet the simple challenge of the crowd, for instance, even those only mildly afflicted with agoraphobia, that they never could stand a simple formation like paycall. I have known the type in civilian life so sensitive to the presence of others that although he had been drinking peacefully for hours and accepting the hospitality of say two or three acquaintances, when an additional member appeared (just when it was our subject's turn to buy a round) he would jump through a plate glass window, four stories to the street below.

Someway, he lacked the group instinct. I admit that type probably wouldn't get on in the army—long. However, I claim these are exceptions.

The majority of the problems which the youth of our land is going to have to face soon are not too tough. And they are good exercise—like parading in full kit.

Meanwhile 694,000 men, without giving more than a thought to the hardships ahead of them (197,000 of these, according to the experts, are re-enlistments and therefore should know what they are getting into) will already have joined up, thus reducing the number of those who bashfully await their Uncle's nod this year.

Thus out of the 924,000 new men needed, less than 250,000 will be drafted. And many of those who are called will not be chosen because of the number of exemptions granted.

Veterans with combat records, with 90 days service between Pearl Harbor and VJ-day, or with 18 months' service since September, 1940, will be exempt, as will anyone who has earned a combat infantryman's badge, a Purple Heart, Air Medal, or any combat medal.

Exemptions will be granted to any veteran joining an organized reserve unit, or if the nearest one which he otherwise might join is an unreasonable distance from where he lives.

There are three kinds of deferments for those planning on going to college (1) for all full-time students, until academic year ends; (2) advanced students in certain specialties; (3) four years' deferment for college students enrolling in a full four-year ROTC course or other military courses under special conditions.

There are exemptions under certain conditions for married men, high school students, scientists, engineers and reservists.

So not many young men who don't want to are going to have to serve in the armed forces of their country. At least at present there seem to be enough ready to step forward before they are actually called.

As I remarked, it is easy to understand why the average youth would rather not accept the restrictions and discipline of army life. A part of the lack of enthusiasm for soldiering is due to the long tradition in the United States that soldiering is a wartime business for all those who don't make it their fulltime business. And I use the word business because it describes a career honored in this country far above that of the professional man—the artist or the writer—and the homage rendered is even greater in comparison if a member of the military profession is involved, excepting, of course, war heroes.

This is something hard to change. But the thing we can and should combat is the propaganda referred to earlier—propaganda which is put forward in many cases for far different reasons than even the proponents realize.

Far too often objection to military service is made on the basis that it in itself is a bad thing or a wasteful thing, when the real reason behind the argument is a selfish unwillingness to take the risk or sacrifice the time and effort which the service involves.

Frequently this false reasoning stems entirely from the influence of a parent whose purely selfish possessiveness has perverted the mind of a youngster who otherwise would accept his responsibility and take his training in his stride with no more than the ordinary, harmless grousing which is as much a part of military service as the alibis at the 19th hole.

It Wasn't Like This In the Old Army

The army psychologists have been working double time ever since they discovered that it took more than guts and gunpowder to win wars, and that the winning was easier on something besides hardtack and whiskey.

In World War II, besides the best food an army ever ate, better medical attendance than the average civilian can get, and a lot more superlatives, the armed forces went in for yards and yards of colored ribbon. It did no harm, even if the British did say the Yanks got a new service stripe every time they saw a battle in a newsreel. And it helped morale.

And now something new has been added. A whole new system of chevrons in two colors have been devised for combat and non-combat non-commissioned officers. Combat leaders—squad sergeants and platoon sergeants, for example—get an inch-wide tab of green in the middle of each shoulder loop.

Despite all this, I can't help thinking of the verse that came out of a war where the prevailing color was olive drab—with the drab predominating. It goes like this: Oh the general with his shiny stars, leadin' the parade, the colonel and the adjutant a-sportin' all the braid, the major and the skipper—none of 'em look so fine as a newly minted corporal a-comin' down the line!"

Ike Couldn't Say Anything

Before the Democratic political convention, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower couldn't sit down to write a letter without reading in his newspaper the next day that that letter had been translated into an acceptance on his part to run against Truman for the presidential nomination.

Had Eisenhower written a letter saying that he often leaned back to dream about the North African campaign or to think about the decisions at Casablanca, someone would have been sure to come forth to say: "See that? He talks about a campaign—obviously hinting at the presidential race—and 'decisions at Casablanca'—get that? Casablanca is Spanish for White House!

THE BATTLE of the two leagues for all-star talent goes on snappily from year to year. This season the National has the jump on its American league rival when it comes to the rookie contingent, but the American still has the lead in veteran headliners.

The average playing quality in both leagues this season hasn't been any too hot. It hasn't been boiling at any point. The effects of the long war, the draft and war service, haven't worn away yet. They are still in evidence by the number of ballplayers in the big leagues who are not big league ballplayers.

Williams

This applies especially to pitching, with any number of right and left arms trying in vain to locate the plate. There have been too many badly played games, too many misplays. But there are still more than a few stars.

How would you size them up? Here, at least, is a starter:

American league—Ted Williams, Joe DiMaggio, Lou Boudreau, Joe Gordon, George Kell, Ken Keltner and Allen Zarilla.

National league—Stan Musial, Ralph Kiner, Hank Sauer, Country Slaughter, Johnny Mize, Andy Pafko, Pee Wee Reese, Del Ennis, Tommy Holmes and Carl Furillo.

The National league has come up with the stronger hitters in Kiner and Sauer, two able powerhouses in human mold who can hit the ball a long way. As things look at this somewhat early date, the older league has picked the better crop of kids.

Lack Great Ballplayers

But outside of Musial, the older circuit has nothing to match Williams, Boudreau and DiMaggio as great ballplayers.

Williams is the only ballplayer left with even an outside chance to crowd Ty Cobb's brilliant lifetime record of .367. Williams is up above .350 for his entire career, which means he will need two or three .400 seasons to start a threatening challenge.

In any event, Williams is the only ballplayer left hanging around with the Hornsbys, Jacksons, Sislers and one or two others who belong on the higher uplands of swat.

Williams is the last of the big hitters, the only one who might know another .400 year in his league. The National has its challenger in Musial, a great ballplayer, and another potential .400 entry. Williams and Musial are the two best we have left when it comes to moving the old ash furniture around the house.

The pitchers? You can forget about them. There isn't a pitcher today in the same class with Cy Young, Pete Alexander, Christy Mathewson, Walter Johnson—especially Johnson. And no one around who is as good as Eddie Plank or Lefty Grove.

The last great pitcher the game had was Dizzy Dean. Bob Feller could have been, if it hadn't been for his outside interests, plus the war. Hal Newhouser isn't too far off. Ewell Blackwell was on his way when a sore arm bowled him over.

Golf Psychology

Golfers can't understand why their games should change so quickly and so sharply.

Golf is largely a game of mental attitude for the day. This varies sharply. There are certain days when you can concentrate on what you want to do. As Jim Barnes put it—"Concentration is thinking of the right thing—at the right time."

This means that you can remember to swing smoothly—to keep your head in place, two of the essential things to do. A day later you'll keep hurrying your backswing and then hurry your downswing. Your mental attitude is one of hurry.

"On the days I play well, or better than usual," a certain leading amateur said recently, "I feel lazy. That's a good way to feel if you want to score. Feel lazy. That doesn't mean you have to loaf walking. It means you are in no hurry to get the club head in motion. You loaf on the backswing and then loaf on the downswing."

Finish Your Backswing

This is true enough. On certain days, the golfer starts his downswing before he finishes his backswing. This is one of the game's most common faults. Unless the backswing is fully completed, the downswing is wrecked in advance.

"You looked up on that one," someone will say. Looking up wasn't the fault. Hurrying the backswing was the fault—the reason, the head was lifted.

You can feel lazy on certain days. On other days you can't. You try to—but it won't work any too effectively. On certain days, you can think only of swinging the club head.

Block Housing Bill

ONE OF THE MOST IMPORTANT VOTES in the closing days of congress was held in strictest secrecy, though it affected several million people. It was the vote of the house rules committee to prevent the housing bill from reaching the floor of the congress where other congressmen could vote on it. However, this column has now obtained that secret vote.

The Taft housing bill, with provisions for slum-clearance and low-cost housing, had long before passed the senate. It also passed the house banking and currency committee after Congressman Jesse Wolcott of Michigan pidgeonholed it for weeks

Finally it went to the rules committee, which has the power to decide whether any bill can come before the full house for a vote And that was as far as it got. While thousands of veterans waited for long-promised housing to materialize, six Republicans on the rules committee voted thumbs down.

Naturally they tried to keep their names secret. However, here is the roll call of the six men who flouted the will of the majority of congress and wouldn't even let 400 odd other congressmen vote:

Leo Allen of Illinois, chairman of the rules committee; James Wadsworth of New York, who while voting with the real-estate interests on this, simultaneously demanded that young men be drafted; Edgar Chenoweth of Colorado; Ross Rizley of Oklahoma whose law firm represented some of the big natural gas companies while he authored a rate-increase bill for the gas companies; Forest Harness of Indiana; and Robert Rich of Pennsylvania.

Two Democrats present voted for the housing bill: Howard Smith of Virginia and Adolph Sabath of Illinois.

That was how the Taft housing bill containing the hopes of millions was buried.

One interesting gentleman who walked out at the last minute of the housing bill was Congressman Gene Cox of Georgia.

Cox is a key man of the rules committee, claims to have great influence. Before the vote came off, Cox sent a telegram to his home district promising to support the housing bill.

But just before the vote came, Cox, got up and ducked out of the rules committee. News of his run-out, of course, did not get back home to his home voters.

Woman Gets FCC Post

ONE OF THE FEW Truman appointees to be confirmed by the senate during the last-minute rush of congress was Miss Freida Hennock, the first lady ever appointed to the federal communications commission. Miss Hennock was confirmed not only because of her ability but because of her amazing frankness.

Called before the Republican-dominated interstate commerce committee, Miss Hennock, appointed as a Democrat, told the senators:

"I'm against you and I always have been. I have done my best to collect money for Roosevelt and have probably taken a lot of good Republican money away from what you wanted to collect."

"Do you know anything about radio?" asked one Republican senator.

"Only that I've raised a lot of money for radio programs for Roosevelt," replied Miss Hennock.

Senator Brewster of Maine wanted to know what Miss Hennock thought of Mary Martin of Maine, who last year was considered as a possible appointee to the FCC.

"I didn't know her," replied the lady Democrat from New York. "But I think that women haven't had nearly the recognition they deserved since they got suffrage. If they have brains and ability they should not be penalized merely because they wear a skirt."

The amazed senators, taken back by Miss Hennock's frankness, asked many questions, all of them courteous and friendly. When the hearing was over, the prospective FCC commissioner told the committee:

"You're much too nice. I hope you don't confirm me and that you'll call me back here every week."

But they didn't, they confirmed her right away.

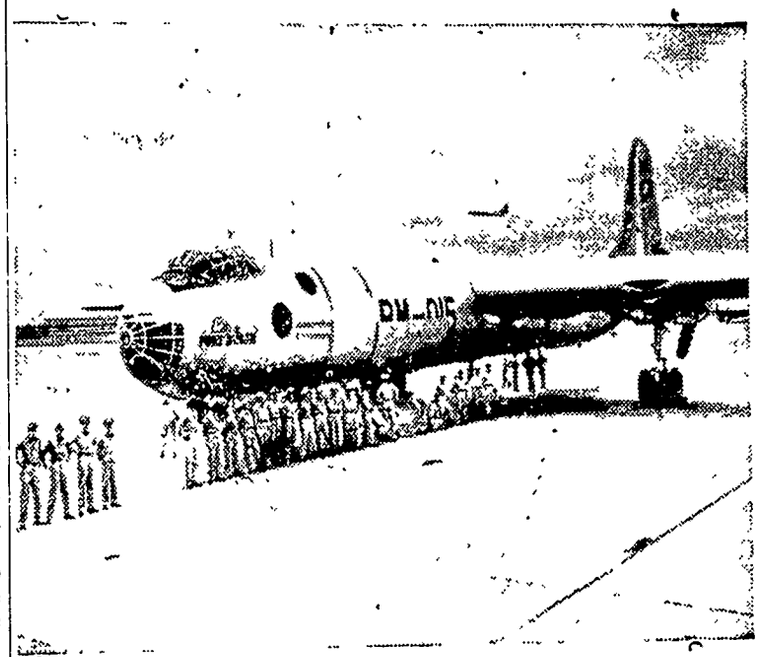
Politics in Education

E. B. NORTON, DEPUTY COMMISSIONER of education, has resigned in a huff over political censorship. He is sore at energetic Oscar Ewing, new federal security administrator, who is the over-all boss of the office of education.

Ewing was former vice-chairman of the Democratic national committee and is an all-out Truman man. Another resignation in the offing is that of Educational Commissioner John Studebaker himself.

EARTHQUAKE LEAVES THOUSANDS DEAD . . . Atom bomb or no atom bomb, mankind has yet to devise a destructive weapon that can equal the stupendous forces sometimes released by nature. When one of the worst earthquakes of modern times hit Fukui, Japan, virtually the entire city was demolished and many thousands killed. Those few buildings that were left standing were burned out by fires that raged through the area.



BEHEMOTH OF THE UPPER AIR . . . They just keep getting bigger and bigger. This is the first combat model of the B-36, largest land-based bomber in the world, as it was delivered to the U. S. air force in Fort Worth, Tex. The giant plane carries a 15-man operating and fighting crew and has a range of approximately 10,000 miles.

THE OLD AND THE YOUNG STAND GUARD . . . Virtually every man—and many women, too—is of "draft age" in Israel. They are neither too young nor too old to bear arms in the Jewish fight to keep the young state of Israel alive. Here, two guards, one old and bearded and wearing a prayer cap, the other younger and equipped with a steel helmet, are shown on duty in the war-shattered Holy Land.

HEAT WAVE? NOT HERE . . . From a dingy old dock at 65th street and East river in New York, small fry Manhattanites were able to thumb their noses at the heat wave engulfing the metropolis. They simply jumped gaily into the water. It was as simple as that, and there were a lot of adults who envied them. On the particular day that all this happened the thermometer showed 92.1 degrees in New York City, and in New York City, brother, that's hot.

BILLIONS . . . Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder displays a check for 7.5 billion dollars, largest ever issued by the U. S. government. It was written for the purpose of reinvesting the proceeds of special treasury certificates of indebtedness.

SHE WANTED WATER . . . Mrs. Lou Brooks Thomas of Fristoe, Mo., ordered a well-driller to sink a well for water on her property. First thing he struck was oil. Said Mrs. Thomas, "All I want is good drinking water." She made him seal the well and drill again until he struck water.

BOYS' TOWN LEADER . . . The Rev. Edmond C. Walsh has been named acting director of Boys' Town, succeeding the late Msgr. Edward J. Flanagan, founder of the world famous school in Nebraska for underprivileged boys.

DONE WITH MIRRORS . . . This is the latest thing in furtiveness. Miss Marilyn Radlein of Des Plaines, Ill., wears a new kind of glasses that are treated to form mirrors on the outside.

JET PILOT . . . Lieut. Col. David C. Schilling, commander of the 56th fighter group of the U. S. air force, led a flight of 16 F-80 jet planes to England in the first trans-Atlantic flight made by American jet aircraft.

Lesson for August 1, 1948

BARUCH, whose name means "blessed," was the grandson of Maaseiah, "governor of the city" under Josiah (II Chronicles 34:8), and his father, Neriah, appears to have been an official during the reign of Jehoiakim. He was a trusted friend of Jeremiah (Jeremiah 32: 6-15 and 43:5-6). Tradition holds that Baruch was carried to Babylon, where he wrote the apocryphal "Book of Baruch," and died in 574, B.C., twelve years after the fall of Jerusalem.

Dr. Newton

Our golden text for this lesson is found in Psalms 119:105, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and light unto my path."

OUR BIBLE

"THEN Jeremiah called Baruch, the son of Neriah, and Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the Lord, which he had spoken unto him, upon a roll of a book. And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying, I am shut up; I cannot go into the house of the Lord. Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of the Lord in the ears of the people in the Lord's house upon the fasting day; and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that come out of the cities," Jeremiah 36:4-8.

How did we get our Bible? Through this simple process of God speaking through his appointed prophet, and by the faithful work of men like Baruch who served as scribes.

THIS SCRIBE OL' LONG AGO

IN the introductory paragraph I sketched briefly the story of Baruch He was a trained man, trusted and beloved This he had to be, else God would not have approved Jeremiah's selection of Baruch to copy what he was saying for God And not only was he selected to write down what God was saying, through his prophet, but he was used to proclaim the words of God to the people in the Lord's house. Baruch was amanuensis, reader and distributor of the Bible —a distinguished role, indeed. Let us today be gladly ready to read the Bible to others, and to distribute and circulate the Scriptures wherever we may Here I pause to pay tribute to the American Bible Society and all others, including the Gideons, who help to make the Bible known to all men everywhere.

A MAN ON WHOM GOD COUNTED

THUS we see that Baruch was a man on whom God counted. His work was done well, and we read that, "When they heard all the words, they were afraid both one and other, and said unto Baruch, We will surely tell the king of all these words."

Young people will do well to ponder this incident. In the varied contacts of young Christians in this modern day, we may be used of the Holy Spirit in making known the words of God in countless ways. Thus, like Baruch, you may be used of God to make known his will unto all mankind.

BARUCH, A COURAGEOUS SCRIBE

THE full context reveals the fact that Baruch exhibited courage as well as faithfulness in his service as scribe to Jeremiah. It was not an easy task. Nor will it be easy to fill our posts as couriers of the Good News But it was a rewarding experience for Baruch. He served his day and generation according to the will of God.

Mr. Henry Ford, Sr., believed in having a copy of the Bible near at hand wherever he might sit down in his home. I heard him say once that he had a Bible on every table in his home "I do this in order that I may reach over and spend a few minutes with the Lord wherever I may sit down. And I always cherish the hope that others will find it a lamp unto their feet and a light along their daily pathway."

Let us give thanks for Baruch—the trusted friend who served Jeremiah, and thus served God.

Conduct

Fundamentally, the force that rules the world is conduct, whether it be moral or immoral. If it is moral, at least there may be hope for the world. If immoral, there is not only no hope, but no prospect of anything but destruction of all that has been accomplished during the last 5,000 years.

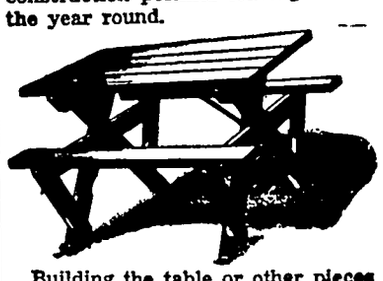
Build It From A Pattern

By: Donald R. Brann

There's nothing like having an old fashioned picnic in your own backyard. Especially so when you have this sturdy table all set up ready to seat the entire family. Its construction permits leaving it out the year round.



Building the table or other pieces of lawn furniture provides an economical solution to your household equipment problems. In many cases two articles can be made for less than one costs ready made. Besides saving money, woodworking provides hours of complete relaxation. Once you've experienced the deep down satisfaction of seeing lumber turn into a useful picnic table or lawn chair, you will undoubtedly become one of a huge army of "Build It yourself" enthusiasts.

ONE FOR THE BOOKS: MOUSE WAKES UP THE PREACHER!

Rev. Harvey and family were sleeping soundly early Sunday morning when suddenly their back door chimes began to ring. It awakened Rev. and Mrs. Harvey. They listened for awhile and no one seemed to be on the porch and they thought some pranksters probably rang the bell. Soon the chimes sounded again, and still there was no commotion on the porch. A few minutes later the alarm sounded again and this time Rev. Harvey dressed and come down stairs, thinking perhaps somebody wanted to get married He looked around and there was nobody on the porch. The chimes sounded again from no apparent cause so Rev. Harvey sneaked up quick and pulled the door open. Out jumped a mouse! The mouse dashed for the kitchen . . . Mrs. Harvey and La Nelle dashed down from upstairs when Rev. Harvey called them and a mouse hunt was on for the best part of an hour. Finally the mouse was captured and sent on his way to mouse heaven or, wherever good mice go.

What caused the chimes to ring? As near as Rev. Harvey could figure it out the mouse would run up the inside of the screen door frame and would run across the chimes push button and that would sound the alarm. After the mouse had been disposed of the Harvey family resumed their peaceful slumber with no further disturbance from the chimes.

CORN AHEAD OF SCHEDULE Leads '47 Growth By At Least Two Weeks

Iowa' bumper corn crop is at least two weeks ahead of last year and more than 64 per cent of it is tasseled.

This was reported in the Iowa weekly weather and crop bulletin Tuesday which added that "many communities are reporting the best crop prospects in history."

The bulletin said:

Although additional moisture in the week ended July 24 delayed small grain harvesting, it was bneficial to corn, beans and pastures.

Above Normal

Precipitation in the 7-day period averaged 50 per cent above normal. Rains ranged to 6.5 inches in Adair County and good moisture was received over a fan-shaped area extending from Pottowattamie county in the west to the Mississippi river, Clinton and Lee counties in the east.

Severe local damage but minor total damage resulted from wind and hail storms in northwest Iowa July 19 and southwest Iowa July 21.

The corn crop was 64 per cent tasseled by July 24 compared with 1 per cent on July 24 last year and only 60 per cent tasseled by August 9 last year. The bumper crop of 1946 was only 35 per cent tasseled by July 24. Iowa's corn crop may average 75 to 85 per cent silked by July 31.

Harvest Nears Close

More than 72 per cent of Iowa's small grain harvest has been bound or combined and nearly all oats, barley and wheat show above the average test weights.

Soybeans and progressing excellently and most fields are in bloom.

Soil moisture supplies are adequate in nearly all areas.

There are widespread reports of damage to new seedings, especially to new clover in southern Iowa.

COST OF GOVERNMENT IN HANCOCK COUNTY HAS SHOWN INCREASE

Cost of government in Hancock County has shown a steady increase since the low point of the depression year of 1932 according to records in the office of County Auditor Maynard Schoneman. The trend has followed the cost of living trend with most of the increase occuring since 1942.

Revenue for all purposes assessed against Hancock County taxpayers has increased 72.67 percent since 1942 with 55 95 percent of this increase occuring since 1942; Road revenue has increased 199.62 percent since 1932 with 80.96 percent since 1942; Schools have increased levies 91.39 percent since 1932 with 72.67 of this increase occuring since 1942.

Total budget requirements for 1948 have not yet been filed but indications are that there will be a substantial increase in the 1948 askings.

Following is a table of taxes levied for various years since 1922.

Year	All Funds	Roads	Schools
1922	$ 756,082.58	$ 85,736.56	$361,797.75
1929	736,522.67	158,151.77	348,808.68
1932	531,657.33	54,400.88	286,117.08
1942	588,638.86	90,072.30	322,756.88
1943	655,560.43	89,902.49	361,090.23
1944	688,304.39	73,638.72	400,864.77
1945	763,600.29	103,995.02	450,424.94
1946	857,859.39	151,982.70	544,090.00
1947	918,003.51	162,993.89	547,599.91

Taxable valuations meanwhile decreased 12.70 percent from 1932 to 1947 and increased but 1.74 percent since 1942 Taxable value of all property in Hancock County was listed at $27,-932,412 in 1932; $23,967,772. in 1942 and $24,385,414. in 1947.

While direct demands on Hancock County taxpayers have been increasing steadily it is interesting to note that federal expenditures have far outstiped local expenditures.

In 1929 federal expenditures were 3.3 billion; by 1938 this total had risen to 8 billion and in 1946 44 billion. In 1929 this represented 4 percent of the total national income and in 1946 a staggering 25 percent.

These astronomical figures don't mean much to the average taxpayers unless reduced to simple arithmetic. Federal expenditures increased approximately 142 percent from 1929 to 1938 and approximately 1233 percent from 1929 to 1946. In 1946 federal expenditures totalled $1,155 per family; in 1938 this total was $250 per family and in 1929 $121. per family.

Governmental costs are relatively rigid while national income may fluctuate widely with the business tide. With approximately 30 percent of the national income being required for the tax load in 1946 (Federal, State and local) it should be borne in mind that a substantial drop in income might cause government costs to impose a critical strain on our economy.

Isn't it about time we began considering a halt in demand for governmental services and begin thinking about balancing our wants. Budgets can only be balanced when wants have been balanced and not before.

Haberkamp-Haugen Speak Nuptial Vows at Lake Mills

HELEN JO ANN HAUGEN BECAME BRIDE OF EUGENE HABERKAMP

Ceremony Took Place In The Salem Lutheran Chuch At Lake Mills

A very pretty wedding was solemnized Sunday afternoon, August 1, at 2:30 o'clock at the Salem Lutheran Chuch, Lake Mills, when Helen Jo Ann, daughter of Mrs. Clara T. Haugen, Lake Mills, and Eugene B. Haberkamp, Klemme, son of Mr. and Mrs. Verner Haberkamp, Garner, were united in marriage. Rev. H. P. Huseth performed the double-ring ceremony in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends

Tall baskets of gladioli and lighted candelabra formed the setting for the nuptial rites.

Sterling Thompson played nuptial organ music preceding the ceremony, the "Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin as the procession, and Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" at the recessional Arthur Valen, Estherville, uncle of the bride, sang "At Dawning" after the candles were lighted "O Perfect Love" preceding the ceremony, and the "Lord's Prayer" while the couple knelt at the altar.

The bride, given in marriage by her uncle, Charles Hanson of St. Ansgar, approached the altar in a gown fashioned of white slipper satin with a fitted bodice and a sweetheart neckline, with long sleeves extending over the wrists and a gored skirt ending in a circular train. Her lace edged fingertip veil of illusion was held in place by a beaded Juliet cap. A single strand of pearls, a gift from the bridegroom, and an arm bouquet of red roses centered with a white orchid completed her attire.

Attending the bride was her sister, Mrs. Leslie Ausen, as her matron of honor, and Judith Haberkamp, cousin of the groom, bridesmaid. Identical gowns of blue marquisette were worn by both and they carried colonial bouquets of pink and yellow gladioli respectively. They wore pearl earrings which were gifts from the bride.

The bridegroom was attended by Leslie Ausen, brother-in-law of the bride, as best man, Verner Lau, cousin of the groom, acted as groomsman. Ushers were Burke Haberkamp, brother of the groom, Earl Backhaus and Boyd Holtan, cousins of the bride.

The mother of the bride wore a black dress with matching accessories; the mother of the groom, acqua with black accessories. They had corsages of pink rosebuds.

Following the ceremony a reception for approximately 200 guests was held in the church parlors. The bridal table was decorated in pink and white with a three-tiered wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and groom as the centerpiece.

Boyd Holtan as toastmaster, presented Barbara Orwoll and Arthur Valen who sang "If I Could Tell You" and "Bless This House" respectively. Remarks were given by Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch and Rev. H. P. Huseth.

Christine Halvorsen and Mrs Tveit poured. Waitresses were Janet Hanson, Elizabeth Valen, Marjorie Grimes, Anita Johnson, Barbara Orwoll, and Geraldine Solomonson. Frances Iverson was in charge of the gifts and guest book.

The bride is a graduate of the Lake Mills High School of the class of 1945 and of Waldorf College in 1947. The past year she has been working in the Business Office at Luther College, Decorah.

The bridegroom graduated from the Klemme High School in 1943. He served with the Navy in New Guinea for two years. He graduated from Waldorf College in 1947 and has attended Luther College the past year.

The couple will reside in Decorah where Mr. Haberkamp will continue his studies at Luther College.

Guests attended from Detriot, Michigan, Waukegan, Illinois, Albert Lea and Kiester, Minnesota, Decorah, Ames, Davenport, Waukon, Estherville, St. Ansgar, Grafton, Kensett, Rake, Belmond, Kanawha, Scarville, Joyce, Leland, Forest City, Lake Mills, Garner and Klemme.

WEDDING IS PLANNED—Mr. and Mrs. George J. Wamsley of Freeport, Ill., announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter, Dorothy, to Melvin E. Coobs, son of Mr. and Mrs. Benn Coobs of Klemme. The wedding will take place August 8 in the First Presbyterian church in Iowa City. Both are students at the University of Iowa.

SUPPLY OF TEACHERS IS INDEQUATE FOR THE COMING SCHOOL YEAR

The teacher supply in the elementary school field, the rural schools in particular, will be very inadequate this coming school year, according to an announcement by Chas. S. Whitnew, Hancock County superintendent of schools. A survey of Hancock County and the state of Iowa as a whole seems to indicate that the teacher shortage in the elementary field will be very acute.

There are probably two chief reasons for this: (1) College students are tending to go to college longer, thereby qualifying for high school positions; (2) Special war emergency certificates, the type issued during the past few years, will not be issued this fall.

Many persons, including school officers, school patrons and those who taught school last year, are asking about special emergency teaching certificates for the school year of 1948-1949. The special war emergency certificates will be issued only to those persons qualifying under Circular 150, issued by the Iowa Board of Education Examiners on March 24, 1948. While it is true that 27 out of 72 rural teachers in Hancock County taught on emergency certificates last year, none will be issued this fall to anyone who cannot qualify under circular 150 which states:

"Only those ppoele who have previously held regular Iowa certificates for the type of position sought will be considered for special war emergency certificates for the 1948-1949 school year. A special war emergency certificate is not regarded as a regular certificate.

"Holders of expired regular Iowa certificates, valid for elementary school teaching, baased on two years of college work will be considered for special war emergency certificates for the 1948-1949 school year without being required to complete additional college credit. All holders of expired regular Iowa certificates, valid for elementary school teaching, not based on two years of college work who are considered for special war emergency certificates for the 1948-1949 school year shall have completed a total of eight (8) semester hours of college credit in an approved institution after September 1, 1946, and prior to September 1, 1948.

"This circular does not assure anyone of a special war emergency certificate for the 1948-1949 school year. It sets forth only the conditions under which a teacher may be considered for such a certificate."

A survey of the Hancock County rural teacher situation as of July 26 reveals 19 schools which were open last year are still without a teacher and have no immediate prospect of filling the vacancies. If the supply of teachers in training this summer is not sufficient to fill the number of vacancies in the township schools the boards will be forced to close the schools for the year and assign the pupils either to another school in the township or contract for facilities outside the township.

The chairman and executive secretary of the Iowa Board of Educational Examiners have given positive assurance that no exceptions will be made to Circular 150 to enable directors to secure teachers this fall. All persons teaching in the rural schools of Hancock County were notified of this ruling last spring. The township subdirectors and school officers were also notified. It is not within the authority of the county superintendent to issue any type of teaching certificate.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Fighting Truman Gets Democratic Nomination, Calls Special Session; Barkley Selected as Running Mate

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Truman In Fighting Mood 'WE ACCEPT!' Barkley Born in Log Cabin

The PHILADELPHIA STORY

Truman-Barkley

If the Democrats hadn't known before their convention that President Harry Truman was their man they found out on the steaming Wednesday when their political show slammed through to a smashing, triumphant finish.

Harry Truman told them so, after the enterprising liberal forces of the party had spent all that Wednesday in the 105-degree heat of convention hall proving it beyond any doubt.

It looked like the Democratic party might have been completely revitalized in 12 tense hours on that last day of the convention, ending a period during which the Democrats' morale and will to win slowly had been ossifying.

The revitalization came as a result of two potent factors which actually could be reduced to one—President Truman's influence.

In the first place, in adopting the strong, positive civil rights plank in the platform the party not only repudiated the idea and spirit of reaction but also dealt an extremely sharp and real slap to the hands of the southern wing which had tried, at times almost savagely, to produce a cleavage within the party.

That action, closely followed by the nomination of President Truman to run for re-election and the nomination of Sen. Alben Barkley of Kentucky by acclamation for the vice-presidential spot on the ticket added another solid timber to the structure that the liberal elements of the party were fighting so hard to build.

Those developments were, in themselves, a complete and victorious proof that the Democrats this year intended to bring themselves before the American public as a responsible, cohesive party that would be striving for nothing less than total victory in the November election.

But it remained for President Truman to give the whole affair a significance that could not be ignored.

Fighting Finish

It was a far cry from a love fest as the Democratic clans, feuding for many months, met in the City of Brotherly Love for their 30th national convention.

After three days of strife and bickering, the conclave came to a close as a fighting President Truman triumphantly accepted his party's nomination for the presidency and then rocked Democrats and Republicans alike with an instant summons to the 80th congress to return for a special session July 26.

The convention, perhaps the most bitterly divided since 1860 and 1924, ended with a political explosion detonated by the quiet man from Independence, Mo. The explosion startled even the regular members of his own party who had engineered the nomination of Mr. Truman to the presidency.

The Democrats pinned their November election hopes on a ticket of Harry S. Truman and Alben W. Barkley. It was the 64-year-old modest, low-voiced former senator from Missouri, who had succeeded to the office upon the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1945, for the presidency. And it was the 70-year-old, soft-speaking, compromising senator from Paducah, Ky., for the vice presidency.

The President's call for a special session provided a dramatic and startling climax to the 30th convention, which had been marked by bitter debate over ferocious family differences.

The party had been ripped by infighting between northern progressives and southern conservatives over the issue of equal civil rights for Negroes. One-half of the Alabama delegation—13 of the 26 votes—and the entire Mississippi delegation of 22 had stormed out of the convention amid boos, cheers and a great pushing and shoving. This was the high point of the widely-heralded southern revolt, although a rump convention was called to meet in Birmingham, Ala.

Discord Flares

Discord prevailed long before the 1,596 delegates from the 48 states and territories gathered in stifling, steaming Philadelphia for the quadrennial convention.

Dissident factions of the party rallied behind a concerted drive to draft Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower as the party's standard bearer. "Ike," however, removed himself from the race with his third and final insistence that he "would not accept the nomination."

The day after the Eisenhower boom collapsed, the New Deal efforts to oppose Mr. Truman with Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas also blew up. Douglas, whom the President had wanted for his running mate, flatly refused to be considered and also knocked himself out of the vice presidential running.

After Douglas declined to enter the presidential race, Senator Pepper of Florida announced his candidacy with the backing of the New Deal wing, but his bid was not considered very seriously.

Civil Rights

After seven days of wrangling, a platform pledging the Democratic party more specifically than ever before to work for basic constitutional civil rights was adopted after a floor fight which proved rather tame in view of the anticipated knock-down, drag-out battle.

The platform calls on congress to support guarantees of:

"The right of full and equal political participation" — meaning anti-poll tax legislation.

"The right to equal opportunity of employment" — another way of promising a fair employment practices act.

"The right of security of person"—meaning a federal anti-lynch law.

"The right of equal treatment in the service and defense of our nation"—meaning the end of segregation in the armed forces.

The long-heralded southern revolt, however, failed to develop into the Dixie-wide proportions predicted. Only Mississippi's 22 delegates and 13 of Alabama's 26 stalked out of the convention in protest against President Truman's nomination and adoption of the strong civil rights plank.

However, 263 remaining southern delegates registered that area's protest by voting for the presidential nomination of Sen. Richard B. Russell of Georgia. Size of the protest vote indicated the Democratic party still has a problem on its hands in the South.

NO LIMITS

American Cities Are Increasing in Size

Los Angeles, brunt of many jokes for its ever-expanding city limits, is not the only American city which is increasing in size.

In fact, American cities are getting bigger all the time, with 298 communities extending their boundaries in 1947 for a new all-time record, according to the International City Managers association.

The rush to keep up with urban expansion marked a 15 per cent increase over 1946, when 259 cities annexed new territory. Most cities seek to annex suburban land to solve their population problems.

"Cities want outlying territory to equalize local tax rates and to provide uniform public services," according to the association.

PERSHING: Taps Sounds

Gen. John J. (Blackjack) Pershing, who led American troops to victory in World War I., is dead at the age of 87.

The aged former chief of staff had been ill since February, 1938, when he was stricken at Tucson, Ariz., by a form of rheumatism which affected his heart muscles. He came close to dying at that time, but rallied with a display of fighting spirit which amazed his physicians. Since then he had lived at Walter Reed hospital in Washington, D. C.

Death was caused by a blood clot which reached his lung. At Pershing's bedside when death came were his son, Warren; his sister, Miss May Pershing, and his long-time physician, Maj. Gen. Shelley Marietta.

Long the idol of a grateful nation, Pershing held the rank of general of the armies, a title conferred on only four other American soldiers, Washington, Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan. He outranked such contemporary five-star generals as George C. Marshall, Dwight D. Eisenhower, and Douglas MacArthur. Their title is general of the army.

Pershing won his greatest fame as commander-in-chief of the American expeditionary force in World War I. Appointed to that post in 1917, he took personal command of the American troops sent to France. He almost immediately became involved in a dispute with other Allied commanders who wanted to break up the American army and use it to reinforce the French and British armies wherever necessary. Pershing flatly refused to let his troops lose their identity.

Born Sept. 13, 1860, in the frontier town of Laclede, Mo., Pershing was graduated from West Point when he was 26. He became a second lieutenant in the sixth U. S. cavalry and launched a career in soldiering to which he devoted his entire life. He fought Indians in the American west, Spaniards in Cuba, Moro tribesmen in the Philippines, Mexican bandits under Pancho Villa on the U. S.-Mexican border and Germans in France.

GENERAL PERSHING Last Battle

Throughout World War II, Pershing received a full report twice a month from General Marshall, his aide of 1917. Although old and feeble, the general followed daily developments closely from his hospital room, paying particular attention to "my boys," who included Generals Marshall, Eisenhower, and George S. Patton Jr.

CROPS: Record Output

Barring a major crop disaster, the nation will harvest another bumper crop this year, with indications pointing to a general crop production which may surpass that of the outstanding year of 1942 and the record set in 1946.

Acreage in crops is among the largest in recent years and yield prospects are good for most crops, agriculture department spokesmen said, on the basis of July 1 conditions.

An all-time record corn crop of 3,328,862,000 bushels was forecast although corn, the largest feed crop, still faces such hazards as a dry, hot August or an early frost. Previous record was 3,287,927,000 bushels in 1946.

The wheat crop prospect of 1,241,751,000 bushels represents a gain of 4 per cent from earlier forecasts. If that amount is harvested, it will rank as the second largest crop in history.

Rice will set a new acreage record and nearly equal last year's record output. Oats and barley will be well above average crops.

Bumper crop prospects are not expected to mean any immediate increase in meat supplies or any noticeable decrease in meat prices but the record harvest should mean larger meat supplies in the future.

Employment Gains

Continuing the postwar upward trend in civilian employment, 1.5 million more persons were employed in civilian occupations last April than in April, 1947, it is revealed in figures compiled by the National Industrial Conference board.

Accompanying this increased employment was a decline of more than 200,000 in unemployment over the year's period.

Alas, Poor Yorick, Capital Has Seen Its Last Theater

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON—As Washington hurries through summer, forced to commute to Philadelphia for its major distraction, it is faced with a painful prospect of less diversion next fall. This city which once boasted of almost a dozen legitimate theaters (when it had a much smaller population) is about to have the last one that lingered on alone turned into a movie house.

The old National theater, which opened in 1935, was burned and rebuilt four times, collapsed once, is now about to end its legitimate days on an issue which is giving the Democratic party equal concern—civil rights. The Actor's Equity, to which most actors belong, won't play here because Negroes are not permitted in the audience.

There is talk that the old Belasco theater, erected in 1895 on Madison place, facing Lafayette square, may be reconditioned and leased to a management which will lift the racial discrimination practice (the Belasco is currently government property and is used as a storehouse). If the Belasco is not reopened, Washington will be theaterless

Washington's theatrical tradition began early. One of the first theaters here was the Washington theater at Eleventh and C streets. It opened in 1804 and its ads proclaiming the grand premiere added in small type: "No Segars are to be smoked during the performance."

When that edifice burned, a second Washington theater, seating 700 persons, was opened in 1821. It boasted numerous improvements and innovations, including stoves, reserved seats, improved acoustics, no liquor in the box lobbies and facilities for Negro playgoers. "Facilities" today wouldn't satisfy—accommodations would have to be on a basis of race equality.

Fourteen years after the new Washington theater had opened its doors the National theater appeared on the site of the present movie-house-to-be. It is located in the very center of what only recently has been called "downtown," on E street which meets Pennsylvania avenue just before it bumps into the treasury building, skirts its northern front and ambles past the White House.

Important clubs, hotels, and restaurants are only a few blocks from the National today but when it was built, it was, like any other point in the young capital, well-nigh inaccessible in inclement weather. When it rained or snowed, Pennsylvania avenue became a mudhole. Residential areas, except those in Georgetown, weren't far from the center of town in the early 1840s, but because of the rough going (the wealthy didn't like to risk their fancy equipages out on bad nights), it cost as much as $10 to get from home to the show.

Now you can ride all the way from Capitol Hill to what was forest and farmland in 1835 for 30 cents.

The capital's greatest theatrical development began right after the Civil war and went on for three decades. By the time I attended my first show here in 1914, there was no dearth of dramatic entertainment and sometimes three original Broadway companies would be playing in different theaters at the same time. It was a good town for openings up until fairly recently.

There is one theater, now a museum, which is still a point of interest for tourists. Originally it was a Baptist church on Tenth street. In 1861 it was converted into what was called Christy's opera house. Later it became Ford's theater. In the upper stage box of this theater, President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by the actor, John Wilkes Booth.

There was a saloon on the corner below the theater where Booth was said to have had his last drink before he crept into the theater, shot Lincoln and leaped to the stage, tripping on a piece of bunting and breaking his leg.

For many years, over the bar of that saloon, hung a crude picture of the assassination, and on the floor was a metal marker where the half-mad actor was supposed to have stood as he warmed his courage in preparation for his theatric crime.

Washington theatergoers were well acquainted with John Booth's acting but better still with that of his elder brother, Edwin, who had the greater talent. But they never saw Edwin Booth on a local stage again. He was so heart-broken over his brother's crime that he never again played in the capital.

A theatrical performance in Washington plays one role that it plays in no other American city. It becomes, on certain occasions, few or many according to the taste of the incumbent president, a ceremony of state. No matter how private a president wants to be when he sees a show, he can't help being a public personage on such occasions.

The secret service responsible for his life, wouldn't think of letting him sit anywhere but in a box where he is separated from the crowd. This, on the other hand, makes him conspicuous. One guard outside the door to Lincoln's box in the Ford theater could have prevented the assassination.

The fact that there was no provision for protection by the government in the Temple of Music in Buffalo cost the nation its President William McKinley.

Since then, the chief executive has had a bodyguard whether he likes it or not, and a bodyguard can't hide its light under a bushel. Entrance and exit from a public building become a little bit of a pageant, no matter how they are effected.

Woodrow Wilson loved the theater. He liked vaudeville and was a frequent visitor at Keith's—now one of our big movie houses. Edmund Starling, head of the secret service under several presidents, often talked to me about how much Wilson loved the theater. Starling enjoyed it, I enjoyed it, and perhaps together, we exaggerated Wilson's affection for the footlights. But Starling used to say that Wilson got more recreation from that source than any other. In his book, "Starling of the White House," he says Wilson preferred musical comedy and vaudeville to serious drama. That was the general impression among the newspapermen, I know.

Both the Roosevelts, Theodore and Franklin, were great theatergoers. Neither of them was a blushing violet as far as receiving adulation of the crowds was concerned, but for a number of reasons, largely the hectic times of the late Roosevelt's regime, the former made his attendance anywhere more of a show. Although an assassin's bullet did lay low a man in Franklin Roosevelt's entourage—Mayor Anton Cermak of Chicago when both were visiting Miami — Theodore Roosevelt was himself actually shot and badly wounded on one occasion. However, this was after he left the White House and while he was making a political speech in Milwaukee.

It was the movie which drove out the later Washington legitimate theaters, but this death blow to the present-day National theater arises out of the growing demand to end segregation—a demand which made itself felt after World War I. and which increased in World War II. The frequent, well-publicized controversies over lifting of the segregation ban in Constitution hall, property of the Daughters of the American Revolution and one of the few available concert halls in the city, have spotlighted Washington's segregation habits—they aren't laws.

The manager of the National theater is not closing the theater for social reasons. He simply can't book shows if he continues race discrimination and he thinks that if he raises the ban, he can't sell tickets to enough white people to make it pay

To southerners it probably seems absurd that such a question should arise, and northerners probably will be just as surprised for the opposite reason. Washington was once a southern city, now it is a mixture of North and South and typical of neither.

Embrace, Pity, Then Endure

Before his third party's convention in Philadelphia, Henry Wallace repeated several times the assertion that he was not a Communist, that he didn't want Communist support, in fact, that he wished they'd get out of his party For this, as some observers pointed out, Wallace was mildly spanked by the Daily Worker, mouthpiece of Muskovite communism in America.

It seems to me that Wallace is following one of Alexander Pope's quatrains in reverse. Remember Pope said:

"Vice is a monster of so frightful mien
As to be hated needs but to be seen,
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

Having embraced the Reds, Wallace seems to be beginning to back up, through pity, and now is finding that he has to endure them, whether he likes them or not.

Czar John L. Lewis

Very few people realize what John L. Lewis has done to white-collar workers, to old people living on government pensions and to the rest of the labor movement.

To get a bird's-eye view of Lewis' operations, you have to go back to the days of the New Deal when it was recognized that all old people in the United States deserved some kind of security. Accordingly the social security act was passed, providing unemployment compensation and old-age pensions.

Today these pensions have become most woefully inadequate, and one factor helping to make them so has been Lewis and his never-ending, inflationary demands for wage increases and miners' pensions.

For instance, when Lewis gouges a multimillion-dollar welfare fund out of the mine operators, the operators in turn pass the cost on to the oldsters and everyone else in the country, whose pension then becomes less valuable.

Thus the miners become a privileged class set aside from the rest of the American people. Not only do they get three and four times the pensions given ordinary citizens, but other citizens have to pay for the miners' pensions.

Thus the widow who tries to make both ends meet on a meager government pension of $30 a month, has to help pay for the miner's pension of $100 a month—because the increased price of coal is passed on to her

ANOTHER THING: Lewis now can bulldoze wage increases for the miners which certain other unions can't. For instance, the railroads have their rates set by the interstate commerce commission. As public utilities they are not free agents to decide what they will charge the public.

Actually, coal is just as much a public utility as the railroads. It is essential to the lifeblood of the nation. But while the railroads are regulated by the ICC; the electric power and gas companies by the federal power commission; and the radio, telegraph and telephone companies by the federal communications commission, the coal industry remains unregulated.

STILL ANOTHER THING: Private industry cannot get together and conspire to fix prices. To do so violates the Sherman anti-trust act. Yet Lewis can get all the miners together from West Virginia to Utah, and from Ohio to Alabama, and present uniform demands on all coal operators, big and little, mechanized and unmechanized—without violating the Sherman anti-trust act.

PREDICTION: 1. The Supreme court in a year or so will reverse its previous ruling and make labor unions subject to the anti-trust laws. 2. Congress, recognizing that the coal industry is just as much a public utility as the railroads will set up a commission regulating both coal wages and coal prices. In other words, Lewis will kill the goose that laid his golden eggs.

Special Session

Some White House advisers are strongly urging the President to call congress back for a special session.

They tell Mr. Truman that he should insist on enactment of major legislation, such as the Taft-Ellender-Wagner public housing bill, which, though blocked in congress, was indorsed in the G.O.P. convention platform.

Friends tell Mr. Truman that if G.O.P. leaders continue to block housing during the special session, he then could charge them with failure to carry out platform pledges.

Other advisers, however, have told Mr. Truman that it would be wiser politically not to call a special session, but to let these Republicans stew in the juice of their congressional mistakes.

Since the President plans to make congress his No. 1 campaign issue if renominated, the latter is probably what he will do.

Ill-Fated Venture

Harry Truman has taken a lot of ribbing about that failure in the haberdashery business. But the other day the President told on himself the story of how he had had still another ill-starred business experience—as an oil prospector.

He told the story to Frank P. Douglass, able boss of the national mediation board, who called at the White House to report that he had nothing to do with efforts of friends to get him named secretary of labor.

"I can understand your position," replied the President. "You know I was once in the oil business myself on a limited scale."

Truman grinningly related how he had had an interest in two oil wells, both of which proved dry on the first drilling.

"The project went broke and my partners and I were forced to sell out," he added.

Fighting Words Weld Party

PRESIDENT HARRY S. TRUMAN

by the California, Wisconsin and Minnesota delegations spearheaded by Mayor Hubert J. Humphrey, of Minneapolis.

This plank paid high tribute to President Truman for his civil rights stand and called upon the congress to support the President in (1) the right to full and equal political participation; (2) right to equal opportunity of employment, (3) the right of security of person and (4) the right of equal treatment in the service and defense of our nation. The resolution was adopted by a vote of 651½ to 582½. The vote does not indicate relative strength of the opposing forces since many states voted against the resolution merely to uphold the resolutions committee which had adopted a compromise plank on civil rights.

The platform differs from the Republican platform in some essentials—it demands repeal of the Republican Taft-Hartley labor act and declares it has proven a failure; it demands repeal of the discriminatory taxes on oleomargarine; it pledges to oppose any revision of federal laws "designed to curtail the most effective functioning of farm cooperatives." This is interpreted to mean the party goes on record against change of the tax-exempt status of farm cooperatives. As a matter of fact the platform supports all forms of cooperatives and "other democratic associations for the purpose of carrying out any proper business operations free from any arbitrary and discriminatory restrictions."

The foreign policy plank pledged continued support of the Truman doctrine, the Marshall plan, the United Nations, the Good Neighbor Policy with respect to South America; and, taking a slap at the Republicans, pledged sufficient appropriations to carry out the will of the congress on its foreign commitments.

Truman's Opposition Lacked Leadership

In the hectic days prior to the roll call of states, the revolt against the nomination of President Truman, followed much the same pattern that was evident in the Republican convention held in the same hall only a few short weeks before . . the opponents of the President could settle on no single leader to make the race

So it was in the GOP convention . . . opponents of Governor Dewey could settle on no concentrated opposition. So the President ran away with the nomination on the first ballot as Dewey did on the third.

While many of the faces of bygone glory were at Philadelphia and the ghost of Franklin D. Roosevelt still hovered over the conglomeration of factions which always has made up the Democratic party, there was no single leader able to cement these factions into unity as Roosevelt and his brain-trusters did through four national conventions, one of them here at Philadelphia in 1936.

While some sources sought to interpret this factionalism in the convention as a "wake" or a "breaking up" of the party, the political history indicates there has always been such factionalism in Democratic conventions. This factionalism or sectionalism has been brought about by geographical and political philosophy factors . . . the south . . . the liberal element, labor, even religion and race.

As a matter of fact in only three conventions since the civil war has this factionalism been brought together with any degree of national unity .. the 1884 Chicago convention which first nominated Cleveland; the 1912 convention at Baltimore which nominated Wilson and the 1932 Chicago convention which first nominated Roosevelt. In all three the cement of unity was a national crisis.

A great many of the delegates believed the nation again faces a major crisis . . . that any day some incident may touch off World War III Hence they sought Gen Eisenbower as a national leader who could weld the party into unity. Eisenhower refused. Then they turned to the liberal and New Dealer, Justice William O. Douglas He refused. Then in attempting to center on someone else revolters could find no one.

Sen. Claude Pepper, of Florida, one of the better known liberals, put himself forward. But the big states . . . California, New York, Illinois refused to take him and swung back into the Truman column after James Roosevelt, son of the late President, had been severely chastised by his own California delegation.

The south wouldn't accept Pepper's liberalism. So, Gov. Ben T. Laney, of Arkansas, was tossed into the ring by conservative and reactionary southerners who put states rights above civil rights. Party caucuses were bitter.

Barkley's Keynote Sparked Enthusiasm

The delegates were whipped into something like old-fashioned "democracy" when Barkley delivered his blistering, fighting keynote speech. The veteran Kentuckian was given a 23-minute demonstration. These delegates were just waiting for something to cheer over, to lift the morale from the bitter depths of factionalism and Barkley gave it to them. He speeded up the tempo of the convention so that by the third day there was some evidence of the will to win and to fight for the nominee of the convention.

Due to the absence of competing downtown headquarters at the various hotels, such as was the case in the Republican convention, there was not quite the activity and enthusiasm engendered among delegates at this convention. Aside from this fact however, the convention hall pageantry was just as hectic and in all probability these Democratic delegates wanting desperately something to cheer about, cheered all the louder for their speakers and the demonstrations were just as vigorous and noisesome as the Republican convention held here such a short time previous.

Comparatively, the convention set-up was identical Some of the state delegations had been changed around to give the more favored Democratic states better positions with regard to the speaker's podium.

THERE WAS DANCING in the streets of Philadelphia during the Democratic convention. But it wasn't Democratic delegates. The traditional Mummers parade was staged for free for the benefit of the delegates. During the Republican convention three weeks before the Mummers show was staged in Philadelphia stadium at $2 a head, attracting some 30,000 people. Perhaps the convention committee though the Democratic visitors less prosperous than their Republican cousins.

SUMMER BOATING SEASON

The boating season is with us again and on lake, river and sea fronts can be seen harassed men and women exhausting themselves in a frenzied determination to get away from it all via the compass and tiller routine.

The urge to cast off and go for a few hours where there are no traffic lights, phone calls, Gallup polls or war rumors is terrific. Inflation has raised the cost of everything from the yachting cap and the rubber shoes to the yacht and its groceries, but once a man has made up his mind to get out and lose his bearings amid the seagulls nothing can stop him.

It is amazing how many men, who get panicky if they find themselves ashore where they are not sure of the house numbers, think it is a pleasure not to have any idea where they are aboard ship.

Yachting is a process of getting lost, sunburned, confused, damp and squeamish with a will of iron.

It is an endeavor to feel carefree if it worries you sick. It is a search for recreation among spar buoys, canned foods, white caps, squalls, low ceilings, uncomfortable bunks, motor troubles and strange regulations.

Rule one requires you to wear a white cap, keep a chart which you can't read, determine your whereabouts by binoculars and carry a horn, a raft, life preservers, and a boarding ladder On dry land any such job would bring a revolt; at sea it is called delightful.

An auto is comparatively inexpensive. It serves you 12 months instead of three and at no time do you have to varnish it, look for openings in its seams, plug up a hole aft, pump it out or hail a tug to get it off a sandbar.

With a boat you spend many months planning changes in design, going over the equipment, arguing with the shipyard owner, checking bills, wondering about the insurance and condemning the yacht club directors for another assessment

What really makes a man go for the yacht routine anyhow? It must be the yen to escape painting the porch, flee the traffic jam and for a brief interval find a life where there are no signs reading "No Parking," "Joe's Jumbo Hot Dogs" and "Antiques for Sale."

Fetch our open dory, skipper, and let's cast off for the open sea with a hearty "Yo ho!"

"Why are the Russians acting that way anyhow?"

"It's a stop-Bevin movement But let's talk about things at home"

"How do you like the Republican ticket?"

"Fine. Dewey and Stymie will make a great team."

"It's Dewey and Warren."

"Warren Harding or Warren Wright?"

"Just Warren Warren, I think. He's a big California movie man or something."

Life has a new photographing technique that may revolutionize the lensing of major events. Takes pictures by remote control and by pressing a button locates famous people anywhere in the auditorium.

Broadway Confetti: Jack Kramer, the net champ, has made $90,000 since turning pro last year. . . . The New Amsterdam theater, home of the Ziegfeld shows and once the proud queen of 42nd street, is having its face lifted. . . . U. S. intelligence will be completely overhauled. John Foster Dulles' brother, Allen, has nix'd Mr Truman's bid to become ambass to France. . Isn't phone tapping the same as entering a person's home without a search warrant? . Henry Luce didn't give the GOP $50,000. He donated only $1,000 to the Repub state committee in Connecticut.

Manhattan Murals: The West 40th street place which calls itself "Coffeeteria." . . . The hack driver quenching his nag's thirst by filling his own battered silk hat with water from a nearby park fountain . The rowboat policeman chasing kids taking a dip in the park lake while the ducks look very satisfied. . . . The one-armed bootblack at 49th and 7th . The chorine with lace-edged sun specs.

Stage Entrance: These are the dog days along B'way. Soaring temperatures are causing spirits and biz to droop Several shows are ready to surrender to the humidity —while others are managing to hang on via cut-rate ducats. . . A glance at the backwoods gives the lie to the crepe-hangers wailing about the decline of the thittir Hill and dale sectors are clogged with summer playhouses. There are more actors in the country than mosquitoes Incidentally, the hayloft circuit used to serve as an incubator for new shows But most of the plays now being unveiled there are reclicks

Midtown Vignette: Two women of cafe society came out of a night club and went for a stroll in Central park. "Oh, look'" said one, "isn't that a sweet baby?" They went over to adore it. "Good heavens!" exclaimed the same woman, "it's my own daughter!" Her surprised friend gasped: "Are you sure?" "Oh, yes," was the reply, "I recognize the nurse."

The Aristocrats: The reason you can't flip a dial without coming across a giveaway· Kilocycles are crowded with about three dozen treasure hunts . The nonsense medal for politeness goes to the disc-jockey who thanks the singer after spinning a record. . ABC's newscaster Harrison Wood has the type of sinewy tones that gives the paprika touch to news bulletins. . . . The compliment swapping of Hollywoodites after appearing on a dramatic show is a molar-grinder. . . . NBC's "Serenade to America" offers a tasty dish of musical meringue

Israel is having internal difficulties. But it should be remembered that other nations who fought for freedom also had domestic troubles. After the Revolutionary war commenced 25,000 Americans enlisted in the British army.

The Intelligentsia: A book that will rip the small town school system wide open is "The Hickory Stick" by Virgil Scott, to be published this fall by Morrow. Schoolboards probably will fire any teacher caught reading it. (Author is a teacher at Michigan State college, East Lansing, Mich.) . . Oscar of the Waldorf has retired to write his autobiography, which will be called "From the Cradle to the Gravy" or "From Alphabet Soup to Nuts." . Artie Shaw, the former bandleader and ex-husband of "Forever Amber," is joining the literati with a vengeance. Has a novel, a musical comedy book and a straight play in the typewriter.

George Long is a songwriter who has to eat. His latest three ditties are titled: "Eisenhower, the Man of the Hour," "We Want Truman Four Years More" and "We'll Do It With Dewey."

Ebed-Melech, The Ethiopian

Lesson for August 8, 1948

ARE you ready for a real story? Then turn to Jeremiah 38, and read on to verse 18 in the 39th chapter. This interesting story reveals a hero, Ebed-melech, by name, which means "the king's slave." This may have been his official title rather than his personal name. Anyway, he is the hero of our story, and a very admirable hero, indeed.

Dr. Newton

He was a Negro, and Ethiopian eunuch, in charge of the king's chambers. Zebekiah, as the story reveals, held Ebed-melech in high esteem. He was, obviously, a most honorable man. How he had come to know Jeremiah, and to esteem him so highly, is a subject for profitable contemplation. The devotional reading, Matthew 25.31-46, offers final opinion on the value of Ebed-melech's ministry to Jeremiah. The golden text, "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men," Galatians 6:10.

JEREMIAH'S FRIEND

EBED-MELECH was Jeremiah's friend. When he saw what the princes had done to Jeremiah, he went to the king and begged him to allow him to draw Jeremiah out of the mire in the dark dungeon. He knew that Jeremiah would soon die in this awful place, and Ebed-melech risked his life in making the request to rescue Jeremiah. The wonder is that the princes had not ordered Ebed-melech slain. Evidently, they recognized the hand of God.

Like as this Negro servant in the long ago served God by rendering kindness to a man of another race, so may we today serve God and civilization by good will and kindly service to all races

FREEDOM THROUGH A SLAVE

THE story of Ebed-melech's kindness to Jeremiah lifts to ennobling example the act of a slave on behalf of freedom The world's benefactors are those who understand freedom, and cast themselves in utter self-forgetfulness into the struggle for right against wrong

What had Jeremiah done to receive such harsh treatment? He had delivered God's message to the people of Jerusalem, warning them that the city would be taken by the Chaldeans, and how they might escape destruction Jeremiah was proclaiming freedom — not always a popular course For this effort to help the people, he was thrown into the muddy dungeon. This servant of the king was the only man in Jerusalem who understood the purpose of Jeremiah.

A FRIEND INDEED

GRANTED permission from the king to rescue Jeremiah, Ebed-melech devised prompt methods of letting down old pieces of rope and rags, telling Jeremiah how to fasten them under his arms, and with the aid of thirty men drew him up from the mire, and brought him into the court of the prison.

And then God spoke words of great reward to Jeremiah on behalf of Ebed-melech. "But I will deliver thee in that day, saith the Lord; and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the men of whom thou art afraid. For I will surely deliver thee, and thou shalt not fall by the sword, but thy life shall be for a prey unto thee, because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the Lord."

WHO SIDES WITH GOD

EBED-MELECH'S noble ministry to Jeremiah lifts up a banner for every true follower of the Lord. Who sides with God must always win. That is the lesson of the lesson. We should never have known about this Negro, had he not cast his all on the side of God.

"Who sides with God must always win,
No cause to him is lost."

Social People

It seems clear to me that God designed us to live in society—just as He has given the bees the honey; and as our social system could not subsist without the sense of justice and injustice. He has given us the power to acquire that sense. —Voltaire.

Our Creator would never have made such lovely days, and have given us the deep hearts to enjoy them, above and beyond all thought, unless we were meant to be immortal.—Hawthorne.

Christianity is not a theory or speculation, but a life and a living process.—Coleridge.

Lawn Furniture Can Be Made at Very Low Cost

MAKE your porch, terrace or lawn an outdoor living room —turn your backyard into a picnic ground. You'll be agreeably surprised to see what fun dining out can be. Food takes on an added zest when flavored with the thrill of a picnic.

Making a home is traditionally American. The strength of the country rests on the people who have built a home for themselves and their families. Building lawn furniture or any other home equipment is not difficult. You can do it if you try. Each pattern is designed so that no special tools or skill are required. Build this lawn set for immediate use. You'll save money and have fun building it. Each pattern contains a complete purchase list of materials. All materials which the pattern specifies are stock size and readily obtainable at lumber yards everywhere.

Tall Corn - - Sweet Corn

Everybody knows that corn grows tall in North Iowa, but sweet corn is usually not very tall. However, Wes Haefner brought in a stock of hybrid sweet corn to the Times office that measured 11 feet from butt to tip. Some sweet corn! We wonder how it would taste on the cob?

MULLINS WILL GIVE RESIDENTIAL DISTRICT FREE FLY SPRAYING

Mr. Mullins has notified the Klemme Civic Club that he will give the residential section of Klemme an extra DDT spraying the first week in August. The last spraying for fly control will be given both the residential and business section during the latter part of August.

Mr. Mullins is giving the residential section an extra spraying free of charge as he feels that the first spray here was not properly applied and was not as effective as it should have been. Experienced help applied the second spraying which was very effective as Klemme has been quite free of flies and mesquitoes since the second application of DDT.

Asks Cooperation

Mr. Mullins points out that property owners can help keep the town free of flies by frequently spraying their garbage cans and other places that might attract flies. August is usually a bad month for flies and more spraying should be done by property owners.

Hooks Another Big One

M. L. Harson has been Klemme's No. 1 fisherman this summer when it comes to catching large fish. Harson's most recent big one was a 9½ pound Northern pike caught at Clear Lake Sunday morning. For a couple of weeks recently he has caught his limit daily in large Walleye Pike.

CLAIMED 600

The heat wave claimed 600 victims down at Albia recently. Turkeys, that is. The birds died on the Robert Flangan farm when a whilwind whipped up some dust on the bird-lot, and the turkeys, frightened, huddled together inshelter.

X-RAY FOR T. B.

With the x-raying of 60 persons at a conference to be held the morning of August 4th at Britt, the current search for tuberculosis cases in Hancock County will be concluded.

Miss Harriet Oxley, public health nurse, who in recent weeks has been visiting homes and inviting persons known to have been exposed to tuberculosis to have skin tests and x-ray, if necessary, to determine or not they might have contracted the disease, expressed her gratitude with the response she has obtained.

The search, which is the 8th to be held in this county, is sponsored by the county medical tuberculosis association in cooperation with the Iowa Tuberculosis Association and the Iowa State Department of Health. The local Christmas Seal funds are meeting part of the costs.

A motion-picture camera has been developed which can take 11,000,000 frames a second. Sixteen frames is normal.

and glad to get away from humans. And I didn't peep at you on your roof. I looked. It can't be a crime to look at softness and beauty and sweetness, with so much hardness and ugliness and bitterness in the world. It can't be a crime for a—Ah! Let's talk about the ape!" he finished quickly, harshly.

"Well, I like that." Harriet laughed.

She moved away from the parapet, small and shapely in the night against the neoned sky. "I'm cold. I'll have to get a wrap. Don't go away. I'll be back in a minute." She ran.

Ralph Pell watched her cross the flat roof of the other building to the small shedlike structure that housed the stairway. It was about forty feet away. Then he jammed his hands down into his trouser pockets, swore softly and kicked at gravel on his own flat roof with his good foot, balancing himself on the artificial limb. His eyes were stormy, his lips tight.

Harriet was swell people. That made it tough, but positive. She deserved a whole man. Years, or maybe only months or weeks from now, she'd look back and be glad that things turned out as they had She'd realize that he was right, and maybe she'd understand why—and—well, everything It was tough now, but—

HARRIET'S small figure appeared in the doorway of the stairway shed on the other roof. Even as she appeared, a strange black shape came between them, all but blocking her from his view. Then he heard her scream, shrill and clear in the night.

"Ralph!"

The ape!

The impact of the two words drove him forward until his knees struck the edge of the low brick parapet bordering the eight-story drop into the alley between the two buildings.

He heard Harriet scream again.

Shouting for help would be useless. By the time someone heard and understood and reached the other roof. . . . It would take many minutes to run downstairs, cross to the other building and get to the roof. In the meantime. . . .

Sweat came out on his face as he put his good foot up on the edge of the brick parapet and thrust his lean weight up with the other leg. Grunting with effort, he flung himself out over the alley and toward the brick parapet of the other building roof.

For a moment, he was drifting down through the black Normandy night, a huge silk dome above him, bracing himself for the blast from the ground, the numbing shock of bullets striking.

His artificial foot struck the other parapet and slipped off. He fell. There was a quick, breath-taking drop toward the pavement eight floors down, then his outflung arm struck brick. Brown fingers curled over a sharp edge, gripping. Strain came on the arm as he stopped the fall, and his weight all but tore his fingers loose. Small, sharp sounds came from his lips and he got his good leg up, hooked the heel over the edge of the parapet, then levered the rest of him up. He rolled over the parapet top and dropped to the flat gravel roof of the other building, and his heart beat was shaking him.

"It would never make any difference to me. To me, you would always be—" She groped momentarily for a word that would not sting.

Even as he struck he was up and running toward Harriet and the black shape.

He came within reach, laced fingers into stiff, course fur and jerked savagely to drag the black shape away from Harriet. The fur yielded with an ease that all but made him fall, and he found himself holding the black-furred pelt of a small animal. There was felt sewn to the underside of the pelt, and he recognized the thing.

"Hey! This is the little black bearskin from your apartment!" He yelled at Harriet Marne standing before him in the darkness, small and quiet. "Hey! You made me jump that—! I might have—!"

"I knew you wouldn't fall—couldn't fall." Harriet Marne started laughing and crying at the same time "It was just one more jump you had to make—to prove—Oh, Ralph!" Her lifted arms were slim and white in the night.

Ralph Pell dropped the pelt, and there was no further need for words.

THOSE DISC JERKIES

We weren't aware that those recorded radio programs, M. C.'ed by eager young beavers known as "disc jockies," had become so much a part of teen-age life until one of our hi style scouts from Nashville, Tenn., told us it was customary to end up an evening date at the local radio station to watch the platters go 'round and listen to the jockey joke. That piece of news set us out on the trail for more disc jockey info. Tune in to the next transcribed paragraphs, if you're interested.

MOTHER'S DAY—Up in Montreal, Canada, Disc Jockey Bob Horne, who conducts a regular after-school clam bake for teen-agers, has established every Thursday as Mother's day Teen-agers request records to be played for their mothers and the Mother-of-the-Week is picked from their letters and is sent a dozen roses. Wonder if any mother has been honored with Spike Jones' "William Tell Overture."

RHYME TIME—Out Detroit way, a disc jockey known as "Jack the Bell Boy," reads poems submitted to him by ten-agers. He also sends out membership cards and club pins to every teen-ager who wants to join his disc club.

CLOCK WORK—In Dayton, Ohio, teen-agers depend on Bud Baldwin's "Breakfast in Bedlam" to get them to school on time. And in Oklahoma, disc jockey Tom De Vore spins special "Two-Minute Egg" tunes for the benefit of housewives who like to boil their eggs to music.

CELEBRITY SESSIONS—Lucky St. Louis teen-agers who attend Disc Jockey Gil Newsomes' "Teen Thirty" club have actually met such guest stars as Buddy Clark, Nat "King" Cole, Eddy Howard, Frankie Carle, Stan Kenton and, oh, so many others. Also, after the broadcast, there's an hour of dancing right there in the studio.

Well, as one disc jockey said to another disc jockey, "Go fly in a saucer." And that, junior, explains the mystery of those discs you saw in the sky last summer.

Thy Word

Grace Noll Crowell

AS THE wild things store their food for each winter hour,
Thus, Lord, I have hid thy word within my heart,
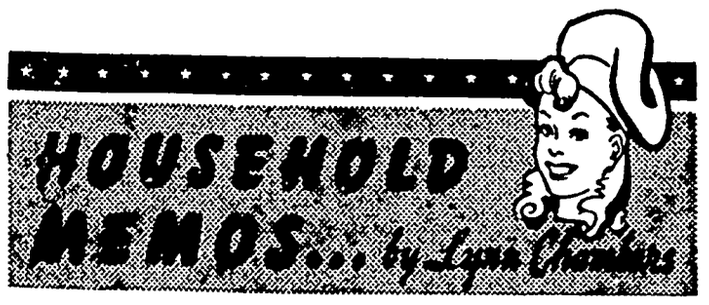
To draw upon for food, for strength and power
When the winds blow cold and darkness is a part
Of daily living. I have safely stored
Thy word, dear Lord, a precious golden hoard.

So radiantly it glows within my breast,
It is like firelight, like candleshine.
I share it with the hungry and oppressed,
I give it out, and still thy word is mine.
I should be as a beggar in my need
Had I not hid this food on which to feed.



Have a Porch Meal; Family Loves Them In Summer Weather

IT'S A TREAT to eat outdoors! Mom gets out of a hot kitchen, and the whole family can enjoy a meal even at the end of the day if they eat it in a cool breeze out on the porch, under the old tree or in the garden.

This is real outdoor eating and it can be almost picnic style. Plan it to be casual and everyone will have fun. Carry out all food, plates and utensils on a tray and save trips to the kitchen and then back again.

A bowl of flowers from the garden will make the occasion seem festive indeed.

Almost any kind of a meal will be easy to serve as long as you can fit it on a tray so everyone can help himself. Even a roast will work out well served in this way. Place your creamed, au gratin or browned potatoes in the center of a large platter. Slice the roast in the kitchen and place it around the potatoes.

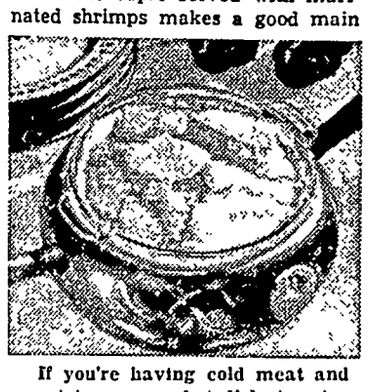
IF THE DAY is a sweltering one and calls for a cool supper, why not try a really cool supper? A loaf of tomato aspic served with marinated shrimps makes a good main dish. Add cucumbers to this for eating and for garnish. Ice cream or lemon sherbet served with crisp delicious cookies will complete the meal.



If you're having cold meat and want to serve a hot dish, too, try macaroni and cheese; that time-honored potato casserole, au gratin style, or creamed potatoes, topped with cheese.

Tomato Aspic with Shrimp
(Serves 8)

- 2 tablespoons plain gelatin
- 1/2 cup cold water
- 1 1/2 cups hot water
- 2 8-ounce cans all-tomato sauce
- 2 teaspoons chopped chives or 1 teaspoon lemon juice
- 1 (5-ounce) can shrimp, drained

Soften gelatine in cold water. Add hot water and stir until dissolved. Add all-tomato sauce. Chill until the mixture is of the consistency of unbeaten egg whites. Stir in chives or onion juice. Turn into a loaf pan and chill until firm. Unmold on greens and garnish with shrimp that have been marinated in French dressing.

IF THE WEATHER is on the warm side and you don't want to spend much time cooking, select a simpler meal. For example, have sliced tongue or other cold meat served with macaroni and cheese and complete the meal with sliced garden tomatoes and cucumbers and butterscotch chiffon pie made in the morning.

Macaroni and Cheese
(Serves 4)

- 1/4 pound macaroni
- 3 tablespoons butter
- 1/4 cup floor
- 1/4 teaspoon dry mustard
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 2 cups milk
- 1 tablespoon onion, minced
- 1 cup grated American cheese

Cook macaroni in boiling, salted water until tender. Drain. Make sauce by melting butter, adding flour which is blended with mustard and salt. Add milk and onion and cook until thickened. Add grated cheese and stir until melted. Combine sauce and macaroni and place in a greased casserole. Bake in a moderately hot (400 degree) oven until browned.

Butterscotch Chiffon Pie

- 1 baked 9-inch pie shell
- 1 tablespoon plain gelatin
- 1/4 cup cold water
- 3 eggs, separated
- 1 cup brown sugar
- 1 cup scalded milk
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 cup granulated sugar

LYNN SAYS:
Use These Tips For Porch Suppers

Appetites are bound to be big when you're planning to eat out-of-doors. Plan generous servings of all your foods.

Toss many of your garden greens together if you want a lovely wooden bowl salad. Into this can go lettuce, cucumbers, spinach, cauliflower, radishes, green onions, celery and shredded carrots. Use a tangy French dressing.

Let gelatin stand in cold water five minutes. Beat egg yolks until thick, beat in brown sugar gradually, then add milk. Add butter and salt and cook in top of double boiler until mixture coats the spoon. Stir in gelatin. Cool. Beat egg whites stiff, add granulated sugar and fold into first mixture. Pour into baked pie shell and let chill until firm. Serve with whipped cream, if desired.

OF COURSE, there are nothing like hamburgers for a real favorite as a supper dish. But, here's a new way to prepare the burgers, for they're smothered in onions and noodles:

Special Hamburger Patties
(Serves 6-8)

- 1/2 cup milk
- 1 cup soft bread crumbs
- 1/2 cup grated onion
- 1/2 teaspoon poultry seasoning
- 1 1/2 teaspoons salt
- 2 pounds hamburger
- 4 tablespoons flour
- 6 slices bacon

Add seasonings, bread crumbs and milk to meat. Mix well and shape into patties, three-fourths inch thick. Dredge with flour. Wrap a slice of bacon around each patty and fasten with a toothpick. Broil patties until they are thoroughly cooked and nicely browned.

Cook one-half pound of broad noodles until tender; then season with butter, salt and pepper. While noodles cook, slice three large onions and fry them in drippings.

To serve, place noodles on a hot platter, top with hamburger patties and smother with the onions.

A DELICIOUS DESSERT that goes well with this is a pear pie. Bake it in a glass dish and bring it out to the porch to serve.

French Pear Pie
(Makes 10-inch pie)

Pastry:

- 1 1/4 cups flour
- 1/4 teaspoon baking powder
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 6 tablespoons shortening
- 3 to 4 tablespoons ice water

Filling:

- 6 cups sliced pears
- 3 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1/3 cup corn syrup
- 1/3 cup sugar
- 1/2 teaspoon ginger
- 2 tablespoons flour

Topping:

- 1/3 cup shortening
- 1/2 cup brown sugar
- 1 cup flour

To make pastry, sift flour, baking powder and salt together. Cut in shortening with pastry blender or two knives until it is the size of peas. Add water in small quantities, mixing with a fork until it just holds together. Pat into ball and chill. Roll dough out and line a glass pie plate, pressing dough into fluting.

French pear pie is a delightful dessert for those porch suppers you're bound to be having. The pie is made deep and the topping is a crumbled mixture, part of which will melt into the pears to make them even more delicious.

To make filling, peel, core and slice pears; mix with lemon juice, corn syrup, sugar and flour. Place in unbaked pie shell.

To make topping, cream shortening and brown sugar. Mix in flour and top near mixture with this.

Bake in a moderate (375 degree) oven for about 45 minutes until pears are done.

Creamed potatoes will be more interesting if they have some chopped dried beef added to them. If you're not too hungry, this will take the place of meat.

A quick and easy way to prepare a ham slice is to bake in a sauce made of one cup of water, one-half cup brown sugar and a few slices of orange, stuck with cloves.

Sausage meat can be mixed with egg and soft bread crumbs, then baked and served with cooked, drained and lightly fried noodles.

Household Hints

Keep powdered sugar in tightly covered glass or tin containers to prevent lumping.

You really should cook potatoes and other root vegetables in their jackets. Valuable vitamins and minerals are near to the skin.

Slice leftover potatoes, pour over them some white sauce and grated cheese, then heat in the oven for one-half hour.

Vary bread pudding by garnishing with chopped nuts, marshmallow sauce, shredded cocoanut, or maraschino cherry sauce.

Cheese will stay moist if you spread the cut edge thinly with butter and keep in the refrigerator.

When only a few drops of lemon juice are needed, puncture fruit with a fork or sharp-pointed knife. Squeeze gently. This prevents wasting the whole lemon.

To remove bits of ground meat easily from the food chopper, follow up the meat with a small amount of stale bread. The breadcrumbs will carry away any meat which remains in the chopper.

To preserve the new appearance of your refrigerator, remember that defrosting alone is not enough. Clean it thoroughly, inside and out, with soap and water every time it is defrosted.

Oranges at room temperature, or slightly warmer, will give more juice than chilled fruits.

Mrs. Mitchell Bock and children, Jimmy and Joyce Ann and their guests, Mrs. Richard Schmid and Linda spent Friday with Mrs Bock's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bessman near Dows where the ladies assisted cooking for threshers.

Mrs. Otto Pringnitz, who recently moved her house to town, now has it on the foundation and will build an addition to the north and a large porch to the east. She will have a nice home when these improvements have been completed.

Mr. and Mrs. John Swalve of Clear Lake, former residents of this community, were visiting with old Klemme friends Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. Swalve have a very nice home in Clear Lake and say they enjoy living there.

John Neuberger and family of Brownsville, Texas, arrived in Klemme last week Tuesday on their way north to get cooled off. However, cool weather was prevalent in Iowa the past week and Saturday morning the thermometer registered 50 degrees. The Neubergers said the weather had been extremely hot at Brownsville.

Movie Program Hit Snag, Working On New Set-up

CIVIC CLUB WORKING ON NEW MOVIE PROGRAM FOR SUMMER

A meeting of the officers of the Klemme Civic Club was held Monday evening to discuss ways and means of completing the movie program for the summer, at least, and possibly arranging for an all-year around movie program.

The Des Moines firm. which had been putting on the movies this summer, apparently has gone out of business as they failed to show up two weeks ago without even notifying the entertainment committee. However, their services were not entirely satisfactory as they had had a couple of breakdowns earlier and were unable to show.

The people of the community seem to want movies and the Civic Club is working now to get in touch with a reliable company to furnish entertainment. A movie operator met with the committee on Monday evening and it looks very promising for the future movie entertainment here the whole year around.

KLEMME WON FROM HAYFIELD IN WELL-PLAYED GAME HERE

One of the best played games and most interesting to the fans was the Hayfield-Klemme ball game under the lights last Thursday evening. Hayfield got off to a good start and made 3 runs before Klemme could get organized. Klemme came right back, slammed in 4 runs to forge ahead and add 2 more runs while Hayfield could only push accross another lone run to wind up the game, Klemme 6, Hayfield 4.

There will be no more home games until next Tuesday night, August 17 when Clarion comes here. Klemme, however, plays at Crystal Lake this Thursday night.

BIRTHDAY HELD SUNDAY FOR WILLIAM STILLE, 84, YEARS

Wm F Stille was 84 years old Tuesday, August 10th, but a birthday was held at his home Sunday in honor of the event.

Mr and Mrs. Lee Anderson and children of Charles City came to spend the day with him, as also did Mr and Mrs. Lester Klemme.

Mr. Stille is in remarkably good health for his age and does not appear to be a day over 70 years. He again plans to spend the winter either in Florida or California.

19 RURAL SCHOOLS IN HANCOCK COUNTY HAVE NO TEACHERS

Nineteen Hancock County rural schools are still without a teacher for the opening of the school year on September 1, according to a report released by County Superintendent Charles S. Whitney.

It is possible that some of these vacancies will be filled from girls preparing to teach who are attending summer sessions. Those boards unable to hire a qualified teacher will be forced to close their schools and contract for other school facilities with neighboring schools or independent districts.

Took In Circus

Mrs. A. H. Dulmes, Mrs. Ray Jorgenson, Jr. and Mrs. R. A. Jorgenson took Dick Dulmes, Roger and Warren Terhufen, Graydon Barz, Jerry Finders and Judy Jorgenson to the circus at Mason City Thursday afternoon. The kids had a great time . . . we don't know how well the ladies enjoyed looking after the kids.

Others from Klemme who attended the circus were Mr. and Mrs Ed. Thompson and children; Mr and Mrs. Melvin Neuberger and children; and Mr. and Mrs. Lee Jennings and Ray.

Wilsons Purchased Home In West Des Moines

Mr. Wilson has been working in drug stores taking the place of phramacists who are on vacation.

Coobs-Wamsley Wedding Takes Place At Iowa City

DOROTHY WAMSLEY IS THE BRIDE OF MELVIN COOBS AT IOWA CITY

Vows Were Spoken At The First Presbyterian Church Sunday Afternoon

The First Presbyterian Church of Iowa City, Iowa was the setting Sunday afternoon for the wedding of Dorothy Marie Wamsley, older daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George J Wamsley of Freeport, Ill., and Melvin Eugene Coobs, only son of Mr. and Mrs Benn Coobs of Klemme, Iowa. The marriage vows were repeated at 2 o'clock before the groom's uncle, the Rev. H. E Buss, pastor of the Evangelical United Brethren Church of Gladbrook, Iowa.

The bridal gown of crepe satin fashioned with yoke and sleeves of nylon silk, full skirt and long train was trimmed with tiny self-covered buttons and had been made by the bride's aunt, Miss Dorotha Schmidt. For "something borrowed" the bride wore her classmate's finger-length veil and the "something old" was a Swiss-embroidered handkerchief which had been given to an aunt of the bride's mother more than 60 years ago. The bride carried a white Testament on which lay a purple orchid.

Caryl Jean Wamsley of Freeport, Ill. was maid of honor for her sister and Peggy Lou Coobs, the groom's sister of Des Moines, Iowa, acted as bridesmaid. Both wore identically fashioned gowns of yellow and blue taffeta respectively, made floor length with full skirts, round necklines and cap sleeves. They wore short veils and carried colonial bouquets of chrysanthemums and pale-blue delphinium.

Harlan Buss, cousin of the groom and a music student at the University of Iowa was best man while the ushers were Bill Zabilka and George Wamsley, brother of the bride.

Preceding the ceremony, Mrs. Brainard Covert, a friend of the bride and her family gave a 15 minute program of organ music and Harlan Buss, tenor soloist, sang "Through The Years" and "O Promise Me," closing with the "Lord's Prayer" which was sung while the bridal couple knelt before the altar.

Immediately following the ceremony a reception was held in the church parlors where the guests were served cake and punch from an attractive table covered with a lace cloth and lighted by tall white tapers in crystal candelabra. Donna Fierheller of Polo, Ill., presided at the punch bowl while Eunice Larsen of Klemme, Iowa, served the wedding cake. The hostesses were the bride's roommates, Rosemary Schaefer of Breda, Iowa and Dorthea Schmidt of Freeport, Ill. Helen Wiederrecht of Wapello, Iowa was in charge of the guest book.

When the bride and groom left for Chicago, the bride was wearing a white pique suit trimmed with small gold buttons and a white hat. On their return they will reside at 332 No. Johnson St., Iowa City, Ia., where they will continue their studies at the University of Iowa.

Out-of-town guests included relatives and close friends of the young couple from Freeport, Polo and Coleta, Ill., and Klemme, Cedar Rapids, Mcgregor, Iowa City, Gladbrook, Forest City, Burlington, Wapello, Hudson, Waterloo, Emmetsburg, Davenport, Spencer, Des Moines, Mt. Vernon and Tipton, Ia., Triumph, Minn. and Elizabeth, N. J.

ANNUAL STROMER REUNION HELD AT FERNON GRIGGS HOME SUNDAY

The eleventh annual Stromer reunion was held Sunday, Aug. 8, at the Fernon Griggs home.

A picnic dinner was enjoyed at the noon hour.

The afternoon was most pleasantly spent visiting. The only members of the group unable to attend were Mr. and Mrs. Paul Stromer, Bernita and Merlin of Rapid City, South Dakota.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Julius Priebe, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Schmidt, Irene and Marvin, and Mr. Wm. Schmidt, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Schmidt and Luverne, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Goll and Beulah, Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Priebe, Mr. and Mrs. Dean Rasmus, Judith and Kenneth, all of Klemme.

Mr. and Mrs. Victor Huenemman, Miriam, Lois, Abigail, Rachel and Eunice of Garner; Mr and Mrs. Rudolph Bienert and Franklin of Forest City; Mr. and Mrs. Fernon Griggs, Jay and Jane, and Ronald Wood of near Miller. Mr. and Mrs. David Beckman of near Fertile were Sunday afternoon callers.

KLEMME BUSINESS MEN INVITED TO PARTICIPATE IN ANNUAL FEED

The annual County Chamber of Commerce picnic supper will be held at Eagle Lake State Park on August 19th.

The Garner Chamber of Commerce has invited the business men of Klemme, Goodell and Hayfield to attend. The menu will be: Fried chicken, sweet corn, potato salad, pickles, parker house rolls, butter, coffee and lemonade.

Each town can bring their own food, or can purchase at $1.00 for the above meal.

Business men in Klemme who attend should get in touch with C. G. Waterman at once if they want tickets.

Quandts Up North For Vacation

Mr. and Mrs Conrad Quandt left Sunday morning for their cabin at Two Harbors, Minnesota to be gone for six to eight weeks during the hay fever season. They live at 1st Street, 1st Avenue, Cottage 25. They have closed their cafe while they are away. Mr. and Mrs. Quandt had been in business for 27 years on August 8th, and this is the first time in that many years their place of business has not been open every day. They certainly deserve a good vacation.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

Mr. and Mrs. Percy Freeman, of McGregor, Iowa, announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter on Sunday, August 15, at the First Congregational Church at McGregor at 2:00 p. m. to Donald A. Schaefer, son of Mr. and Mrs Emery W. Schaefer of Forest City, Iowa.

Miss Freeman graduated from Upper Iowa University this spring from a two-year course as a Normal Student. She will teach first grade in the Postville school this fall. Mr. Schaefer is a senior at Upper Iowa and will receive his Bachelor of Science Degree in June 1949. Miss Freeman was chosen as the Homecoming Queen at Upper Iowa last fall.

Mr. Schaefer is a member of Kappa Sigma Kappa fraternity, member of the camera club and other various campus activities.

EGG

A Rhode Island red hen belonging to John Hansen, of near Gray, was having a bad day last week. She brought forth an egg shaped like a peanut, a little over two inches wide and less than an inch in diameter at its widest point.

State Conservation Commission Sets Duck Season

KLEMME FOOD MARKET INSTALLED TWO MORE NEW MACHINES PAST WEEK

The Klemme Food Market is still on its modernization program and the past week two more electric machines were installed at the store. Both machines are the last word in modern store equipment.

One of the machines installed is a Tenderator. With this machine it is possible to make the most tender and delicious steaks out of the cheaper and tougher cuts of beef. Small revolving knives perforate the meat as it goes through the machine and the meat comes out in the popular "minute steak" cuts.

The second machine is a new meat slicer and replaces the hand driven slicer that had been in service for several years The new slicer is electrically driven and is the latest type slicer. It will de-rind bacon, slice cheese and meats in any thickness.

Manager Martin Barz says there are more improvements ahead in the near future

Mr. and Mrs. Charls Russ of Panhandle, Texas came Sunday afternoon for a few days visit at the Lloyd Sherwood home. Mr. Russ is a brother of Mrs. Sherwood.

HELLO, FOLKS!

Mr. and Mrs. Avron Kreitlow of south of Klemme are the parents of a baby boy, Donald Eugene, weight 5 lbs. 9½ oz. born at the Mercy Hospital in Mason City on Tuesday, August 2, 1948.

THIRTY DAY DUCK SEASON SET

The 1948 duck season has been set by the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service and concurred in by the State Conservation Commission The 30-day season will begin at noon October 29 and close one hour before sunset November 27. Each day following the season opens one-half hour before sunrise and closes one hour before sunset.

The daily bag limit of ducks is four per day with eight in possession after the opening day. Only one bird in bag or possession may be wood duck. Bag and possession limit on geese has been set at four per day with four in possession. Two of the four geese may be Canada geese of any species or white-fronted geese, or one of each.

The bag limit on coots has been reduced from 25 to 15 birds per day with a possession limit of 15. The season on jacksnipe, woodcock and doves remains closed in Iowa.

The regulation which prohibits the use of automatic loading or repeating shotguns capable of holding more than three shells still continues in effect.

The post season period for holding of migratory game birds remains the same as last year, 90 days after the close.

The use of live ducks or geese decoys in taking waterfowl or the use of bait remains illegal. The new regulations also require that migratory waterfowl when transported interstate must have the head and feet attached for identification purposes.

The seasons this year have been set on a flyway basis with more liberal restrictions on flyways where waterfowl were considered more abundant and gunning pressure light. In preseason investigations the Fish and Wildlife Service has determined a slight increase in North American waterfowl populations over last year.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Berlin Crisis Nears Showdown; First Peacetime Draft Begins; Special Session Opens Campaign

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

NOT YET—BUT SOON
Josh sergeant now--but just wait a few months!

BERLIN:
Showdown

The old familiar pattern of just one crisis after another in the cold war between Russia on the one hand and the western Allies on the other was being repeated again in the Berlin showdown. But an uneasy world watched anxiously, fearful that at any moment some crisis might explode into actual warfare.

Urgency of the Berlin crisis resulted in the recall of Gen. Lucius D. Clay, U. S. military commander in Germany, and his top political adviser, Ambassador Robert Murphy, for a first-hand report on the situation.

Clay conferred with President Truman, State Secretary Marshall and Army Secretary Royall on means of carrying out the American government's intention to stay in Berlin despite the concerted Russian drive to force the western powers out.

The official line was laid down by Secretary Marshall who said that while the United States would not be "coerced or intimidated" by the Russian blockade of Berlin, the administration nevertheless will "proceed to reach an acceptable solution to avoid the tragedy of war."

Although rumors that the Berlin blockade might prove the spark that would enkindle fighting warfare permeated official quarters, the U. S. position appeared to be that this country hopes to avoid war. However, if the Russians are determined to cause more serious trouble at Berlin, this government is determined to resist force with force. It is equally determined to avoid taking any step which might make the situation more serious as long as negotiation and other diplomatic means remain open.

There will be many more talks, much painstaking deliberation among the western powers in connection with the exchange of notes regarding the Berlin blockade, irretrievably linked up as it is with the over-all German settlement.

Marking the high water mark in the deepening Berlin crisis and lending emphasis to the determination to back up its policy that American troops will not leave Berlin, the United States dispatched powerful reinforcements to its air arm in strife-torn Europe.

A big question mark still concerned Russia's ultimate objectives. Was the Kremlin merely trying to drive the Allies out of Berlin or was this but another step in the fundamental objective of moving the iron curtain inexorably westward, country by country, until it embraced the whole heartland of Europe?

DRAFT:
Blows Strong

America's first draftees — 1948 style—are going to be whisked into uniform so fast they won't know what hit them.

The draft proceedings will start rolling Monday, August 30, when the first of 9,500,000 youths will register. Registrations will continue on 17 designated days extending to September 18.

From these millions of men, volunteer draft boards throughout the nation will select the manpower to match the material build-up of air, land and sea forces called for under the rearmament program.

Military men are set to welcome the first draftees into their ranks any time after September 22. Under the law actual drafting cannot start until that date. The presidential proclamation setting the registration dates did not specify when inductions would begin, but they are not expected to start before October 1.

The first draftee, it is indicated, will be 25, unmarried and a non-veteran.

Registration dates specified by Mr. Truman for each age follow:

The oldest group, meaning men born in 1922 after August 30, 1922, will be registered on Monday, August 30

Men born in 1923, August 31 and September 1.

Men born in 1924, September 2 and 3.

Men born in 1925, September 4 and 7.

Men born in 1926, September 8 and 9.

Men born in 1927, September 10 and 11.

Men born in 1928, September 13 and 14.

Men born in 1929, September 15 and 16.

Men born in 1930 before September 19, September 17 and 18.

The proclamation stated that youths born after September 19, 1930, will register on their eighteenth birthday, or within five days thereafter. About 1,200,000 youths come into this category yearly.

CAMPAIGN:
Advanced

With the kickoff advanced six weeks through President Truman's action in calling congress back into special session, the American people are in for one of the most heated and intensive presidential campaigns in recent history.

The whole political calendar has been advanced this year. The President's opening message to the recalled congress signaled the initial salvo in the campaign, which will be in full swing until the November balloting.

Normally, national candidates wait until after Labor day before entering into thorough-going discussion of the issues of the campaign.

This year's campaign also became more involved with the addition of third and fourth parties to the field.

Although its ticket of Henry Wallace for president and Glenn Taylor for vice president was in the field month ago, third party adherents followed the Republicans and Democrats to Philadelphia for their nominating convention.

Rebellious southern Democrats, after walking out on their regular party conclave, gathered in Birmingham, Ala., to enter a fourth party in the field. Heading the states' rights ticket are Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for president and Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi for vice president.

The states' rights Democrats have shown their greatest strength in Alabama and Mississippi, where a combined 20 electoral votes are pledged against Mr Truman.

FOOD:
Consumes Dough

Confirming suspicions which housewives have held for many months, department of commerce analysts reported that food stores easily get a bigger part of the retail dollar now than any other business. Food stores are doing far better than before the war by taking in 27.6 cents of each dollar spent in retail channels. In 1940, by comparison, their share was 23.5 cents, according to the report.

CRACKDOWN:
On Reds

Uneasiness over the foreign situation was reflected in two actions directed against subversive elements on the home front.

In the greatest crackdown in history on the Communist party in this country, a special federal grand jury in New York indicted 12 party leaders on charges of conspiring and agitating to overthrow the U. S. government and of being members of a party which threatens overthrow of the government.

The special grand jury to delve into Communist activity was created in June, 1947, by order of Atty. Gen. Tom C. Clark.

Included in the roundup were William Z. Foster, party chairman and several times Communist candidate for President of the U. S.; Benjamin Davis, New York City councilman; John Gates, editor of the Daily Worker, and several members of the Communist national board.

Almost simultaneously, charges that several hundred foreign agents have used the United Nations to cover subversive activities here were hurled by state department representatives at a senate committee hearing.

Robert C. Alexander, assistant chief of the department's visa commission, declared that some of the agents were employees of the United Nations or came here in some way related to the U. N. Such persons are covered by the international immunities act passed in 1945.

Surprised at the charges, United Nations officials insisted that it was up to the state department to back up the charges with facts.

A check on nationalities of U. N. staff members showed that of a total of 2,944 there were 1,463 foreigners. From the "iron curtain" countries there were 108, but many were appointed before the change of governments put their homelands into the Russian sphere.

That Man Again

Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey is sworn in as director of selective service for the second time. Hershey, who will direct the nation's first peacetime draft, held the same post during World War II.

STRAW:
Stack of Money

There are potential stacks of money in the stacks of straw which annually go to waste on U.S. farms. Although the paper industry offers a large potential market for the product, farmers last year burned or did not use about 38 million tons of straw, according to department of agriculture estimates.

Recent technical advances have made possible a large expansion of the market for straw. It has been found suitable for blending with wood pulp to make fine papers and also can be used in the manufacture of various insulating building-board products. Principal industrial use for straw at present is in making corrugated strawboard, which is used as a liner in cartons and boxes. Some straw also is used for coarse grades of wrapping paper.

Research by the department of agriculture laboratory at Peoria, Ill., indicates that straw pulp can be substituted for 25 to 40 per cent of the wood pulp now used in fine and specialty papers.

The strawboard industry was established in this country around 1900, when wheat was harvested with binders and threshed. Every wheat farm then had its straw stack and the straw could be baled. When the combine harvester came into general use, most of the straw stacks disappeared. Development of pickup balers, however, once again have made straw collection on the farm a practical operation.

In normal times, it is estimated, the farmer may add 8 to 20 per cent to his cash income from wheat by collecting and selling the straw.

WAR:
Still Costs

The costs of war continue long after the battles cease. A grateful Uncle Sam already has expended 8 billion, 223 million dollars to returning veterans during the first four years of the G.I. bill of rights, Veterans' administration reports. Accounting for that total were 14 million, 300 thousand "benefits."

It is impossible to determine the exact number of World War II veterans who shared in this payment

Disturbed About World? Sun Spots May Hold Clue

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—If you were disturbed over the mayhem and misunderstandings rampant in the month of July, relax, there may be a scientific explanation. Sun spots.

For the first time in 11 years, there is a maximum number of ultra violet rays about, released by eruptions on the surface of the sun-rays which may cause tempers to flare, emotions to get off balance, glands to be affected so that abnormal behaviour results. This isn't fantasy. Medical science has revealed the effects of over exposure to the ultra-violet ray.

Sun spots may have been responsible for the disturbances you and I read about on just one single day last July—on that day in Haiti a publisher was assassinated by an otherwise gentle young poet because the bard had lost some kind of a scholarship; a 33-year-old painter who lived near the otherwise pleasant and peaceful New England home of House Speaker Joe Martin at Attleboro, Mass., did a dance when he heard his wife was dead—it seems he had shot her in the head; here in Washington, a 22-year-old husband knocked his wife down, tried to stab her with a butcher knife, attacked an innocent passerby and started a fist fight with a policeman; a vitamin plant blew up, a prisoner became ill of benzedrine poisoning, a tanker in Chicago caught fire, Jimmy Roosevelt feuded with the other members of the California delegation and the Russians kicked up the usual fuss.

Baukhage

You and I probably had our own troubles—all perhaps due to nothing but the rash on Old Sol's physiognomy.

Scientists will tell you that sun spots were known by the Chinese before the telescope made them a comparatively familiar subject of astronomical concern. They are not uniform in size or shape and sometimes appear singly, sometimes in groups. A single spot may be large enough to take in our whole planet with room to spare. Groups extend over areas that may include millions of square miles.

Sun spots do not appear to have a definite duration. As a rule, they last but a short time, sometimes not more than a day. But one is recorded (in 1940-41) as having continued for 18 months. The number of sun spots varies greatly in a periodicity that is not strictly regular but that reaches an average of slightly over 11 years.

And last month Dr. Roy Marshall, director of Fels planetarium in Philadelphia, echoed an earlier suggestion made here in Washington. He said that sun spots could have a definite effect on the behaviour of people. And he reminded us that sun spots reached their last maximum frequency (before July, 1948) in 1937—when Hitler started his blitz.

It was several years ago that no less an institution than the conservative and careful Smithsonian, the capital's great scientific organization, speculated on the possibility that there might be a relationship between sun spots and wars, as well as sun spots and weather. Weather affects crops, crops affect economic conditions. Sun spots which release ultra violet rays which affect emotions might, an official report to congress suggested, disturb negotiations between individual leaders which might involve nations in war —that's the reasoning, anyhow.

Some may think it far-fetched. Shakespeare did when he said: "The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, but in ourselves." Poets are frequently right but not, perhaps, immune to the violence of the violet ray. (Witness the Haitian poet who shot the publisher.)

At any rate, the Smithsonian listed considerable technical data showing that sun spot activity frequently had preceded wars.

Some scientists say sun spots may have good effects, too—resulting in heavier foliage, better crops, more rains—as well as their evil tendencies to disturb interpersonal relations, not to mention radio communications.

However, there is little we can do about it, for as far as we know the sun is like a leopard—it can't (or won't) change its spots.

One 'Free' Book Is Not Wasted

If you are one of the lucky farmers who wrote your congressman promptly, asking for a copy of the Department of Agriculture 1948 Year Book, you have a treat in store for you. The first copies already have come from the government printer but it will be some time before the bulk of the printing is ready for delivery

This year's topic is a live one: GRASS

It deals with the general subject of grassland agriculture and there is something in it for virtually every farmer and, if there were enough books to go around, could be utilized by everybody who raises a lawn, not to mention people who run airports or playgrounds, or any other enclosure of greensward.

There is a growing interest in this subject. One member of the department of agriculture called it "a big swing to grass" on the part of farmers over most of the country. Not just as feed but for many purposes and functions One farmer near here, for instance, said to a friend of mine recently that he had quit growing corn for silage He uses grass entirely

In case you have forgotten, you have a chance to get a Department of Agriculture Year Book because of a law passed in Abraham Lincoln's time. Congress every year appropriates a sum of money; the department prepares the book, (under the incumbent editorship of Alfred Stefferud) the government printing office prints, binds and delivers 241,000 copies to members of congress. They pass them around as far as they go. That's the law.

This volume is probably one of the few "free" books which is not wasted for it goes almost exclusively to people who want it and use it—in this order—(1) farmers, (2) state agricultural colleges, (3) other colleges for G.I courses, (4) some high schools

Later on I shall give you an idea of the contents of the current volume which deals comprehensively with the subject of grass (including legumes and associated plants) beginning with the history from colonial days, the place of grass in building soil and feeding livestock, specific information applying to 10 sections of the United States and pictures and descriptions of a 100 different grasses and legumes.

Guard Your Liberty— Know Dates at Least

It's almost impossible to believe that any American would not know the meaning of the approaching V-J day. But will Americans, 172 years from now, remember that September 1 marked the official end of the bloodiest war in history!

Perhaps this sounds absurd to you. It wouldn't if you had read the results of one of a series of polls taken by the Washington Post. Just before July 4, the Post Interviewers asked a number of individuals: "Fourth of July is almost here Can you tell me why we celebrate it?"

Eighty-five per cent of all persons asked had the right answer.

Twelve per cent had no idea why the Fourth is a holiday, and 3 per cent thought it was the anniversary of Armistice day, the end of the Civil war, emancipation of the Negroes or some other event. One of those who had no idea at all on the subject was credited with a college education.

Asked what the day meant to them, 39 per cent said, in various ways, that it meant national freedom; to 18 per cent it spelled personal freedom and liberty in general; 11 per cent said it didn't mean nothin' nohow but a holiday.

How many of us who admit that liberty—freedom—is our inherent right, know what freedom is? Few, unless they have lived in a country where one practices that quick, apprehensive look to right and left, before he dares comment. It's a depression gesture I've seen it and shuddered.

I have quoted W. E. Woodward before. In his "New American History," he says:

"Liberty implies responsibility and the vast majority of mankind has always hated responsibility worse than death. So in all ages, men have run around, holding it out before them as one holds a golden vessel, offering it to anyone who possesses enough vulgar enterprise to take it away from them."

This "vulgar enterprise" is afoot today, snatching liberty, right and left and tossing it into a totalitarian limbo of the things mankind really loves—loves but does not always cherish except in memory.

One might paraphrase an ancient proverb. "A fool and his liberty are soon parted." Folly is not incurable It can be exchanged for wisdom Perhaps some of the "realists" who scorn such abstract subjects as political science and history would do well to encourage study of our liberty, how we came by it and why it is worth keeping

Sportlight by GRANTLAND RICE

A CARGO of active Olympic flesh is now in London. It is part of the pageant of some 5,000 contestants from more than 60 nations where, as usual, it will be the U. S. against the rest of the planet, with the U. S., as usual, a hot favorite to win.

Gil Dodds

This is a strong U. S. team, ably coached and well trained. There is only one large fly in the sticky ointment.

In the eight running races from the 100 meters to the marathon, the U. S. will be lucky to win as many as two. After leaving the 200 meters behind, there will be dark clouds on the horizon for the other six running races unless Mel Whitfield can handle the 800 meter gallop. We should be O. K. in the hurdles and the jumps, including high and broad.

We have won every Olympic pole vault, with one exception—Gonder, France, in 1906. We have won every high jump with two exceptions. We have won every broad jump except one, Petterssen, Sweden, 1920. We have won most of the shot puts and the hammer throws. But in the last 40 years we have won only one race beyond the 400 meter mark. Finland has taken over the 5,000 and 10,000 meter runs and we haven't bagged a marathon since Johnny Hayes turned the trick in 1908.

A Nation of Sprinters

We have been largely a nation of sprinters, lacking the essential quality of stamina that is even more important than sheer speed. On this next occasion, Patton and Barney Ewell will have trouble overpowering LaBeach in the two shorter sprints.

We have no one to handle Herb McKenley of Jamaica, who has run the 400 below 46. Whitfield has a terrific battle on his hands in the 800 as the stamina-infested Swedes, headed by Lennert Strand, take over the 1,500 meter test. Any slight chance we ever had in this race, the best race on the card, vanished with Gil Dodds. And Dodds at his best was a long price. Whitfield can be the team's leading star.

We have heard every reason under the sun for our inability to develop a distance runner. The automobile? Well, the Finns and Swedes also have automobiles. Running time takes too long? It does for us. Lack of interest? Why? A marathon is a far bigger race to win than the 100 yard or 100 meter dash.

Do we develop race horses to run four furlongs or a mile and a half and two miles? Speed is important in a horse, but no more important than his ability to go the route.

The Kentucky Derby is a mile and a quarter. We have no derby types in our Olympic runners. They are from four to six furlong runners. Exactly they are from one-half to one furlong operators.

Plenty of Competition

When you have 61 nations and some 5,000 athletes no one can say what has taken place in the last 12 years since the Berlin games There will be formidable competition from Sweden, Finland, Australia, England, Jamaica, also Czechoslovakia.

Young John Kelly should take care of the scullers and California should hold its own in the eight-oared race. We have not done so well at men's swimming since Johnny Weismuller started climbing trees and beating up gorillas. We have won the last five eight-oared races but haven't been any too hot at the four-oared types, with and without a coxswain.

One interesting feature of these games is the comparative times and measurements from 1896 to 1936—the first and the last.

For example in 1896 W. W. Hoyt won the pole vault with 10 feet 9¾ inches. In 1936 Earl Meadows won with 14 feet, 3¼ inches—a lift of nearly four feet.

In 1896, E. H. Clark won the high jump at 5 feet, 11¼ inches. In 1936, Johnson won at 6 feet 7 and 15/16 inches—almost a foot higher. In 1896 Burke won the 100 meter run in 12 seconds. In 1936 Owen won with 10.3. The 400 meter run dropped from 54.4 to 46.5, nearly 9 seconds.

The 1500 meter run dropped from 4.33.4 in 1896 to 3.47.8 in 1936. This means a difference of more than 45 seconds. You wouldn't think it possible that such wide gains could be made in such a short period of time.

Races Improve

The point is this—if everything that can be measured or timed shows such a vast improvement, why should old-timers in other sports be rated even fairly close to modern stars in football, baseball, golf, etc? If you care to be logical about it, it doesn't make much sense. Certainly as far as sport is concerned the race is improving from year to year, getting better and better. If you bring up the matter of sanity we'll bow out.

"Cluster City" For Atom Age

"Cluster city" is not the a place, but of a style of signed especially for pr against atomic bombs.

Tracy B. Augur, a city and a consultant to the Atomergy Commission is responsthe "cluster city" idea. Such he says, would be a bunch cities of about 50,000 po each, all grouped together terrelated, and separated fr other by four to five miles country.

Augur believes that such would reduce to a minimum fect of an atomac attack an also increase city livability.

Canned Fruits Aid Health
(See directions below)

Stock Up on Fruit

NOW IS THE TIME to use summer's plenty to bolster winter diet patterns and add nutrition to them. The gardens, orchards, vineyards and berry patches are all at your disposal with their infinite variety.

It's really easy to can fruit because there is little to preparing it for canning, and provided you take care to follow directions nothing will spoil. Besides, well stocked shelves with a colorful array of fruit will make wintertime meals so much more easy to plan.

Fruit may be canned without sugar for dietary reasons but, if you can eat sugar, plan to can fruit with sugar as it gives a better product.

IF YOU DEPEND upon home-canned fruit as a main item for winter, it's a good idea to make up a canning budget. For example, if you serve tomato juice four times a week, one cup a serving, plan to set enough aside for 40 weeks. This requires 40 quarts of tomato juice per person. For a family of five you'll need 200 quarts.

Do you plan to serve apples twice a week? At one-half cup per serving you'll need four quarts for 15 weeks or 20 quarts for a family of five.

Peaches, at a half cup a serving twice a week for 40 weeks will amount to 10 quarts per person or 40 quarts for a family of four.

If you serve berries twice every three weeks, at one-half cup per serving, you'll need three and one-third quarts per person to last 40 weeks.

If you serve pears once every two weeks at one-half cup per serving you'll need two quarts to last one person 32 weeks. This amounts to 10 quarts for a family of five.

Do you like to serve fruit juice at least twice a week? At one cup a serving, one person will need 15 quarts for 30 weeks. A family of five needs 75 quarts.

DIFFERENT VARIETIES of fruit come out better in the canning process than others. If you will study these tips and abide by them you'll have fine results.

Apples to be canned whole should be bright and red and hold their shape well although cooked. You'll find that Jonathans work out nicely for this method.

For applesauce, tart apples like Duchess, Maiden Blush, Greenings or Early Transparent are best because they cook to a mush easily. Use them at the peak of the season.

Fully ripe apricots are ideal for canning. Any good eating variety may be canned.

Firm, well-ripened peaches make the best canned ones. Select Elbertas or Hales that are fine textured and delicately flavored.

LYNN SAYS:
You Need to Know These Canning Terms

Acid foods include fruits, tomatoes, ripe pimientoes, sauerkraut and green peppers.

Non-acid foods are vegetables, meats, fish, poultry, game and soup mixtures.

Precooking means boiling food a short time until it is thoroughly heated.

Bartlett pears are good for canning but some people prefer the smaller Kieffer variety, which also are good if they are allowed to ripen in a cool place (60 degrees) for a week or two after picking.

Any variety of plum may be canned as long as it is well flavored and ripe.

HAVE YOU EVER found yourself in the midst of packing fruit into jars and suddenly discovered that you won't have enough? This means digging into the storage closet or running to the store for more, and then washing and sterilizing them. All this comes at a time when you should be rushing the food into jars as fast as possible.

Avoid this by figuring out how many jars you need ahead of time:

One-half bushel of good-sized, perfect peaches yields eight quarts.
Six pounds of apples yield three to four quarts.
One-half bushel of apricots gives nine to 11 quarts.
One-half bushel of plums will give 10 to 11 quarts.
Two and one-half pounds of pears yield one quart.
Five cups (about two pounds) of berries will give one quart.
Eight to 10 tomatoes (2 1/2 to 3 1/2) pounds give one quart.

HAVE ALL EQUIPMENT, including jars with proper lids, ready. Check jars for nicked tops and cracks. Wash in hot, soapy water and rinse thoroughly. Do this the day before.

Use only fresh fruit and berries for canning. Discard those with badly broken skins, broken or overripe specimens.

Pack cold or precook according to directions in chart.

Fill jars to within one and one-half inches of top; add syrup to within one-half inch of the top.

Place into a boiling water bath (with water coming an inch or two above the jars.) Count processing time from the time the water starts to boil, not when it is just simmering, unless so specified. If you use a pressure cooker, follow time given in chart.

After 24 hours cooling period, wash the jars off with a damp cloth, dry and label. Store in a cool, dry place.

Boiling water bath, sometimes called hot water bath, equipment consists of a large vessel such as a wash boiler, lard can or kettle the bottom of which is fitted with a rack or platform on which to set jars while they are processing. This should come fitted with a cover.

Sealing means closing the jars airtight.

Cold pack means filling the jars with food in its raw form.

Hot pack means filling the jars with hot food from precooking.

Freeze in Garden Flavor In Moistureproof Cartons

To keep the most "garden goodness" in fruits and vegetables that are to be frozen, package them carefully. This point is stressed by Miss Frances O. Van Duyne, assistant professor of foods, University of Illinois college of agriculture.

Choose containers that can be sealed tightly and won't leak. Frozen foods are better when packaged in containers that are moisture-proof and vapor-proof, Miss Van Duyne explains. Otherwise the foods dry out and lose palatability.

Cartons come in a variety of types and shapes. Rectangular or square cartons may have inner linings or have a waxed plastic finish; some are made for use with cellophane bags. Most of these are sealable with heat—by pressing together edges of covering material with an electric iron or a hand iron. The cartons are generally easy to handle and store. Waxed cups are convenient, but the seal on the set-in lid isn't moisture- or vapor-proof.

Before sealing a filled carton or bag, wipe inside edges with a clean cloth to remove moisture that would prevent a tight seal. Also press out all possible air from top of bag, then heat-seal tightly. Or you may like the pressure tapes for sealing; they have an adhesive substance on one side so that they can be stuck on edges of bags and cartons.

TRAINING BIRD DOGS NOW LEGAL

Training of bird dogs on game in the wild is now legal. A pistol or revolver shooting blank cartridges may be used while training dogs during the closed season. Conservation officials are urging widespread use of bird dogs as a conservation measure, and it is believed that by their use many hopelessly crippled birds may be recovered and utilized as food Dog owners are cautioned that during hot weather training sessions should be very short.

GUARD LIVESTOCK FROM SCREWWORM EGG INJURY

Farm livestock should be looked over carefully this time of year for accidental cuts and wounds. Where cuts are found, they should be treated with U. S. Smear 62 or 82 to prevent screwworm eggs being laid in the wounds.

It is important to inspect all farm animals once a week throughout the summer and fall, and to treat all wounds. Smear 62 or 82 should be applied generously, and the treatment repeated until the wound is healed, recommended Iowa State College entomologists. Apply the smear with a paint brush in and around castration wounds and dehorning injuries.

Screwworm maggots hatch from eggs laid in open wounds by redheaded flies from the South The maggots make painful attacks on living tissue, and may cause death if not treated.

Don't Spray Alfalfa When Plants Are In Bloom

To avoid killing bees, don't spray alfalfa with DDT for seed production when the plants are in bloom, Harold Gunderson of Iowa State College warns. He suggests that for alfalfa seed production one should make 2 sprayings. Apply the first when the plants are about 4 to 6 inches high and the second one just before the blossoms open enough to show color. Both applications should be at the rate of 1 pound of actual DDT per acre.

Earthquakes occur on the average of every 14½ hours, a major earthquake every 6½ days.

SEEING EYE

Folks at Madrid are still talking about the time five blind persons, who were attending the Salvation Army camp north of there, decided to attend the church in Madrid. They were late in arriving at the service but a "seeing eye" dog led the group down the aisle, stopped at the first empty pew, waited for all of the group to file into seats and then flopped down in the aisle awaiting the end of the service.

Gardenias From Mrs. Garrity

By FRANK BROOKHOUSER

RRELL MILLER, the high-powered scribbler and his lovely Marianne Lane, bickers, are readying a sep-arial billing . . . careers ick, 'tis said. . . .

The coat had been that the first morning. ad put the bucket down, here in the bathroom, with a dazed feeling, unable to disguise her surprise at seeing the lovely lady in his room.

And then he had said: "Mom"—he always called her mom—"I want you to meet Mrs. Miller. Isn't she a lovely thing?"

"She is that, Mr. Miller."

"Marianne, this is mom—Mrs. Garrity. She's taken care of me for a long time."

"Ah, you're always kidding, Mr. Miller. I just clean his rooms for him, Mrs. Miller."

"And never touches any papers that shouldn't be touched," he had said. "And always puts the slippers in the proper spot under the bed."

"I suppose now you'll be needing a regular woman." She was strangely frightened at the thought.

"We will not," he had said.

And then Mrs. Miller, such a sweet, kind girl, had said: "Of course not, mom. If you need extra time, you take it and we'll be happy to pay you for the extra work."

Joy and good feeling and bright spirit had filled the room that morning. And gardenias, dozens of gardenias, in the pitcher on the dresser, in another pitcher on his little bookcase. Mrs. Miller had listened almost enchanted by the story, it seemed, as he explained the reason for the gardenias.

"They have a special significance," he had said. "It seems that I was going into a flower shop and she was coming out and I was going to buy gardenias and she had already bought them. And we bumped and I knocked them out of her arms. And we had lunch. And we got married. And there's a gardenia for every day of the two months we were courting, Mrs. Garrity."

They had always been happy together. You could tell that by the way their faces brightened when they looked at each other, Mrs. Garrity thought. Mrs. Miller had just been starting out then but now she was a big star and Mrs. Garrity went to the neighborhood theater both nights when she was playing in a picture and told Mr. Garrity and her children how well she knew her and got autographs for them.

"And she's as sweet and kind as you could find," Mrs. Garrity always said. Scrubbing the bathroom floor, Mrs. Garrity remembered all the dresses she had given her, the rich perfumes, books for the children, and never forgetting to ask about Mr. Garrity's health.

Of course, they couldn't have a house, not with her in Hollywood so much. But they had made the hotel rooms cozy and home-like. And when she was in the city, they had such good times.

It had never occurred to Mrs. Garrity to doubt the item in the column and she was not unduly surprised when she saw the suitcases in the bedroom. That was why Mrs. Miller had come back this time, then, to take the things of hers that were in the room.

There was a short note on the dresser.

"Please take the black dresses in the closet, Mrs. Garrity," it said.

Now wasn't that just like her, Mrs. Garrity thought, remembering me, even with all her sadness. And her heart must be so heavy today. No, it wasn't right. Even if they were apart a lot. It probably had been some foolish argument they would both get over in time. Hadn't she argued with Mr. Garrity? Yes, many times when they were younger. And it was nicer than ever when you made up.

The idea of gardenias came suddenly to Mrs. Garrity in the maze of memories that were flashing through her mind. There wasn't much time Mrs. Miller was probably only out for lunch and would be back any minute.

Mrs. Garrity reached into her pocket, pulled out a small wad of bills. She counted them carefully. There were seven. Well, the grocer would just have to wait. She went down the service elevator and hurried to the flower shop on the corner.

"I want seven dollars' worth of gardenias," she told the florist.

He stared at her, bewildered. "Seven dollars worth," she repeated, looking at him sternly. He shrugged his shoulders and started to work. She walked rapidly back to the hotel with the large box.

In the rooms again, she hurried to the typewriter and fingered the keys idly, her rough, gnarled hands looking strange in this position. Now what should she say? It was very important what she said. It had to erase a lot of things, it had to say a lot of things.

She started to type with great care and deliberation. "BECAUSE THEY ARE BEAUTIFUL LIKE YOU . . . " Yes, that was all right. Maybe he would be able to put it better, him being a writer, but that is what he would mean. ". . AND TO WISH YOU HAPPINESS WHEREVER YOU GO . . . " Yes, that was all right. She felt almost romantic, reading it to herself again. "WITH ALL MY LOVE . . " She smiled as she typed his name.

Hurriedly, she filled two vases with water, put the gardenias in them, placing the note auspiciously beside one, and then she began to clean the rooms, working spiritedly, feeling much better now. She managed to finish her work before Mrs. Miller returned.

Reading Hal Boyd's column on the subway the next morning, she felt her heart quivering with intense happiness, felt a lilt there that she could hardly believe was possible for a woman of her age. Her eyes glazed with tears as she read the item for the fourth time:

"Darrell Miller and his missus, Marianne Lane, say it isn't so that they are through and they have a message for Mrs. Garrity . . . the message: 'IF YOU THINK IT'S THAT IMPORTANT, SO DO WE'."

Mrs. Garrity got off the subway, her eyes dreamy, walked proudly into the basement of the hotel.

I KNOW that Jesus lived, and that He died;
And that He rose again, and this to me
Is proof of my own immortality.
There is an empty tomb and by its side
Stands One so radiantly clean and white
That men through all the centuries can see
Beyond the closed doors of eternity,
A Light:
A luminous, clear Light that will not die,
An emanation from the living Christ.
His certain resurrection has sufficed
To blot away all doubt and fear, and I
Who love life so will find there are no bars
To keep my soul from climbing the bright air,
Drawn by that high impelling radiance there
Beyond the stars.

Andrew, The Man Who Brought Others

Lesson for August 15, 1948

MEET Andrew, brother of Simon Peter, fisherman of Galilee. Follow his career and you will account him one of the truly great men of the ages, chiefly because he was ever alert to help men on to God. He was always introducing his friends to Jesus.

Dr. Newton

There are many passages of scripture cited for this study, with the devotional reading in Luke and the Golden Text from John 1:40: "He brought him to Jesus."

WHAT ANDREW TOLD HIS FRIENDS

WHEN Andrew met Jesus, and discovered in him the Saviour of men, he went and found his brother, Simon, and said unto him, "We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ," John 1:41.

What do we tell our friends? Do we not delight to tell our friends what we have found to be good? This was the mission of Andrew—telling his friends about Jesus, for he had found in Jesus that which was good. John the Baptist had told Andrew about Jesus, and he was determined that he would tell everyone who would listen this good news

HOW ANDREW KNEW ABOUT JESUS

ANDREW got his impressions of Jesus firsthand. When he heard John the Baptist say, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," he went on to inquire about Jesus, and Jesus bade him and John spend the day with Him They did, from 10 o'clock in the morning until late afternoon That was enough Andrew knew from that day about Jesus. He was now ready to tell others what he knew about Jesus.

Do we know Jesus well enough to tell others about him? If a fisherman could tell the story effectively, cannot everyone? But let us remember this, no man can introduce his friend to Jesus until he himself knows Jesus.

THE MAN WHO BROUGHT OTHERS

LET'S look for a moment at some of the people Andrew brought to Jesus We begin of course, with Simon, his brother Here, I think, is the highest test of his ability to tell others about Jesus—bringing his own brother It is often easier to tell strangers about Jesus than those of our own family

And now we see Andrew yonder in the multitude, finding the lad with the loaves and fishes, and bringing him to Jesus That is the test of seeing the right person at the right time And again this is the acid test of introducing people to Jesus.

Again, we see Andrew sensing the fact that some young Greeks had come a long way to see Jesus. He knew how to help them In this incident we see the final example of winning people to Jesus—cultured Greeks, who were familiar, we may assume, with the current thought of the world But this simple fisherman of Galilee knew how to approach them, how to gain their attention, how to bring them to Jesus

THEY WAIT FOR THE ANDREWS TODAY

THE world waits for some Andrew today. I fully believe that most people could be won to Christ if only there were enough Andrews. Rarely have I had a person to repel me when I faithfully followed the leading of the Holy Spirit to speak to such person about Jesus.

Andrew did not rely upon his own resources. He went in the might of the Lord. He knew what Jesus had done for him. He yearned to see all men enjoy their blessing. He was a simple messenger—a voice.

And God gave him words—words that fell like good seed into fertile soil. So may we today introduce our friends to Jesus. Only let us remember this—we must first know him!

AROUND THE HOUSE

Before you attempt to peel a raw tomato, massage it lightly with the dull edge of a knife. The peel will come loose much more easily.

Ordinary starch will often put a whitish cast on black and dark-colored clothes, unless you do something about it. Put a small amount of leftover coffee—the brew, not the grounds—into the starch.

When the stove begins to look dull, but still doesn't quite need new polish, you can brighten it up by rubbing it occasionally with waxed paper.

To prolong the life of a broom, dip it in hot soapy water or hot salt water about once a week; and always hang the broom up or stand it on its handle but never on its head.

Scissors are not considered a kitchen utensil, but are handy to keep in the kitchen to cut up lettuce and celery, trim fat from meat, and dice fruits and other vegetables.

If the wash water is hot, slip each glass slowly into it edgewise. Putting it in bottom first or top first may crack it.

Brown shoes can be dyed black temporarily if you just polish them twice with a good grade of black polish.

If you use rubber gloves when you scrub floors, put little strips of adhesive tape inside the fingers as protection against nails in the floor. Tiny holes in rubber gloves can often be mended with nail polish.

Soot can be prevented from coming through a window screen by covering the outside of the screen with cheesecloth. It'll catch the soot and can be removed for easy washing whenever necessary.

When stewed fruit begins to turn sour, reclaim it by adding a pinch of baking soda and boiling the fruit over again for a few minutes.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: The linoleum in our kitchen has risen up in a certain spot. It is inlaid linoleum over a felt base over plywood. Do you think if we bored a small hole in the linoleum and poured some kind of cement in, it would hold? What kind of cement would you recommend for this job?

ANSWER: Try this method for flattening the bulge: Cut a slit in the bulge, following a line of the pattern so that it will not show. Then press linoleum cement under each side of the slit, working it well underneath with a spatula, or some similar tool. Wipe off surface smears promptly. If you cannot get linoleum cement, use roofing cement. Smears of roofing cement should be promptly wiped off with turpentine. Then place weights on top until the cement has dried hard.

QUESTION: My walls are covered with a very poor quality of wallboard, which bulges here and there. It is covered with paper; but now shows a few cracks, which developed after the furnace was started. What is the best thing to do with the walls? The expense is an item; I'll have to have someone do all the work.

ANSWER: For a good job it would be better to take off the board and replace it with one of better quality, properly put up according to the manufacturer's instructions; or else nail up new boards over the old ones. In the meantime, you might consider nailing down the bulges as well as you can, and then covering the joints with strips of decorative wood moulding, such as half-round.

Achievement Show Will Be Held At Garner Sale Barn

Final Schedule For 4-H Achievement Show August 24 and 24

4-H boys and girls will exhibit their projects to compete for County honors at the Hancock County 4-H Achievement show Monday and Tuesday of next week.

4-H boys, parents and leaders, and all who can help will meet at 9:00 a. m. next Saturday to clean up the sales barn in preparation for the show. Judging is scheduled to start promptly at 10:00 a. m. on Monday, and hogs, dairy, sheep, horses, and poultry will be completed by noon. Monday afternoon will feature demonstration teams and this should be an interesting highlight of the show. The schedule of demonstrations is as follows:

1:00—Cletus Hejlik and Frank Wellik on "Separator Sanity"; 2:30—Harley Limberg and Charles Sheets on "drawing sediment samples", 3:00—Darwin Wille and Maurice Jacobs on "Operation of the Separator"; 3:30—Larry Fox and David Tgetmeyer on "Producing Quality Milk"; 4:00—Audrey Verlo on "Culling Poultry", 4:30—Allen Anderson and Doren Lackore on "Livestock Marketing Losses"; 5:00—Ed Chizek and Cletus Liska on "Working the Milking Machine".

A judging contest open to all 4-H and FFA members will be held from 1 to 2 p. m. on Monday. Judging of the baby beeves will begin at 9:00 a. m. Tuesday. This will take most of the morning with 120 beeves anticipated for the show. The show will be climaxed with the baby beef sale scheduled to start promptly at 2:00 p. m. Tuesday.

"JOE" SCHAEFER INJURED BOTH HANDS WHEN GASOLINE IGNITED

"Joe," son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Schaefer of Klemme suffered a painful injury Thursday evening while working with a Greiman Ditcher near Fairmont, Minnesota.

"Joe" was washing his hands with gasoline to remove grease and dirt when a spark from the motor ignited the gasoline, burning both of his hands. He was taken to a Fairmont hospital for treatment and was able to return home Friday afternoon. He will be off the job for a week or ten days.

LIBERTY GO-GETTERS MEET

Eric Meyer gave a talk on proper management and showing of livestock when the Liberty Go-Getters met at the home of Elmer and Joe Wellik last Wednesday evening. Ten members answered the roll call. Herb Allen. County Youth Assistant, showed ways of splicing a rope and discussed the rules and regulations for the achievement show and judging teams.

A softball game was scheduled with Bingham township for Friday evening, August 6.

Bulkas Move Into Kingery House This Week

Stanley Bulka and family this week moved into the house on Main Street which has been occupied by Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Kingery. The Kingerys have retained a couple of rooms until they can find an apartment at Fort Dodge where Mr. Kingery will have his headquarters in state rehabilitation work.

Mr. Bulka is music director in the Klemme Schools.

SAVE AND STORE FUEL NOW FOR USE IN FALL

Fall plowing and the tourist trade are more closely related than most people think. Dale Hull, Iowa State College extension agriculturay engineer, says oil needs for fall plowing come at the same time as the peak demand for tourist gasoline.

Recent Oil Industry Information Committee reports indicate that the farm supply of oil products has kept slightly ahead of demand in most instances so far this year. The committee credits favorable weather in helping farmers through the planting and early harvesting season with a minimum of supply problems. August always brings increased demand for petroleum products, however, and the committee asks the continued cooperation of farm-fuel saving as well as fuel storage.

This heavy August demand for pertoleum can mean a shortage if farmers do not have a backlog to carry them through. Hull has several suggestions for fuel asving as well as fuel storage.

Inspect the spark plugs closely before starting fall plowing—new plugs can mean a fuel saving of as much as 10 percent. Aid cleaners should be kept clean to keep the tractor breathing freely.

Radiator temperatures, for proper operation, should range from 165 to 185 degrees, according to Hull. Closing the radiator shutters will help the tractor warm up faster in cool weather, as well as maintain the proper temperature.

"While not immediately apparent—the use of heavy duty motor oil in farm tractors will result in improved engine life, provided air cleaner maintenance is good and radiator tmperatures are maintained at normal," says Hull.

Efficient farm fuel storage means more than merely keeping the barrels full, Hull maintains. Loose connections soon become costly, in addition to increasing the fire hazard.

As a final recommendation, Hull advises filling the storage tanks in advance so that demands for petroleum products will not come all at one time In this way, the already expanding distribution facilities will not be overworked, and the farm work can continue uninterrupted.

1948 TAX INCREASE GREATEST IN NATION

Preliminary estimates of taxes paid to the federal government by Iowans in 1948 show that they paid the greatest percentage increase over 1947 collections of any state in the nation.

Total taxes from Iowa were 28 per cent greater this year than last. The 1948 preliminary estimate sets internal revenue collections from Iowa at $446,182,330.48 as against $348,763,454 52 in 1947, according to statistics of the market and research division of the Iowa Development Commission.

In rank of the largest total amount of taxes paid ot the federal government this year, Iowa ranks twentieth The comparative increase of collections among the 48 states over 1947 places Iowa two per cent above her nearest competitor, Michigan, with a total increase of 26 per cent.

In the amount of largest total returns, highly industrialized New York state led by a substantial margin. Yet New York's increase in tax payments over 1947 was negligible, while the increase listed for Iowa amounted to $97,418,875.96, a 28 per cent jump

The increase in total tax payments means also that there was an increase in total income Incomes in Iowa, relative to the tax payments over the same period, were Family income, $5,052, per capital, $1,547; per farm, $11,500.00 These figures show that the great productions of Iowa's industry, agriculture, trades, services and other categories of commerce reaped a rich return, significantly vivid in the increased tax payment volume.

Fort Dodge Lady Honored At Afternoon Party

Mrs Ronald Gibbs entertained a group of ladies at her home Tuesday afternoon honoring her twin sister, Mrs James Fredin, who is visiting here from Fort Dodge. Those present, all former school mates, were Mrs. Warren Quintus, Mrs. Bill Boeshart, Fletcher and Penny, Mrs Dale Greiman, Mrs. Gordan Upmeyer and Kathleen of Garner and Mrs. Clarence Trampel and Richard of Klemme.

The afternoon was spent informally, after which lunch was served.

Busemans Injured When Car Turns Over On Gravel Road

Mr and Mrs. Wayne Buseman were injured when their car turned over 4 miles east of Klemme Friday evening

Mr. and Mrs. Buseman were returning home from Lyle, Minn., where they had visited her parents, Mr and Mrs. Enno Eden. As they neared Klemme their car skidded on loose gravel and turned upside down in the ditch Both Mr and Mrs. Buseman received cuts and bad bruises but were not seriously injured. The car was badly damaged.

KLEMME PUBLISHER SOLOS IN PLANE AT WICKS FIELD

R. A. Jorgenson, publisher of The Klemme Times, made his first solo flight in a Piper airplane under the supervision of Bill Evans at Wicks Field at Garner Saturday morning.

Klemme's "flying printer" owns a faster Cessna 140 airplane which he hopes to start flying in a few weeks after having gained more flying experience He also claims to be North Iowa's first flying Editor!

Klemme has quite a number of "air-minded" citizens: Lyle Green, Don Schaefer, "Joe" Schaefer ,Vern Greiman. Martin Barz, "Curly" Back and Ray Jorgenson, Jr A few others are contemplating of taking up flying.

SQUIRREL AND RABBIT SEASONS SET

The Conservation Commission announces the opening of the squirrel and rabbit hunting seasons for September 15, with the open season on rabbits to continue through January 31, and the squirrels being legal game through November 15 The dates recommended by Commission biologists were set by the Commission under provisions of the law, passed by the Fifty-second General Assembly, which authorizes setting open season dates for any period between September 1 and March 1.

The daily bag limit on squirrels was set at six with possession limit of twelve. The daily bag limit on rabbits is set at ten with no possession limit. The squirrel season was shortened 30 days, the rabbit season shortened 44 days by the Commission action.

The season on pheasant will not be set until the next Commission meeting, to be held on September 6, 7, and 8 The seasons on quail and fur-bearing animals will be established at the October meeting of the Commission.

MUSIC MOTHERS BAND UNIFORM FUND GETS NICE BOOST

The Band Uniform Fund sponsored by the Klemme Music Mothers sailed upward the past week with contributions totaling $50.00, but several hundred more dollars are needed to get the new band uniforms for the school band.

The following contributions were turned in the past week:

Mr and Mrs. Paul Grange	$25.00
Dwight Helps	10.00
LeRoy Johnson	5.00
Herman Baack	5.00
James Larson	3.00
Mrs Herman Paul	2.00

Let's keep those contributions coming in every week. Any amount, large or small is welcomed.

Mrs. Paul Grange was the first President of the Music Mothers several years ago and the Granges are still interested in our schools. Thir son, Lt. Dorance Grange who was killed in World War II, was a member of the Klemme High School band.

Parents Of Klemme Lady Celebrated Their 50th Wedding Anniversary

Last week Harry Schuster and family visited with her folks Mr and Mrs. P. R. Silvester at Worthington, Missouri, who will have been married 50 years on September 23.

On account of school being in session then and it would be hard for the families to gather, their 50th Wedding Anniversary was therefore celebrated on Sunday, August 8th. Besides relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Silvester also entertained neighbors and friends at their home.

It had been 8 years since all of the Silvester family had been together.

BIG BALL GAME TONIGHT

It's the battle of the century and anything can happen, when the Klemme Coops. play the Northern Lbr. Co. in a soft ball game, at the Klemme field tonight.

The two outfits played a couple weeks ago and they are still arguing about it. It may be necessary to call out the State Militia to keep everything in line tonight. You will attend this game at your own risk!

Nellie Lou Sherwood Is Bride Of Ervin Ausborn

NELLIE LOU SHERWOOD BECOMES BRIDE IN CHURCH CEREMONY

Miss Nellie Lou Sherwood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Sherwood of Klemme, became the bride of Ervin Ausborn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Ausborn of Klemme, in a candlelight ceremony at the Klemme Methodist Church on Saturday afternoon, August 14th at 2:30 p. m. with the Rev. Herschel E. Harvey reading the double-ring ceremony before the altar lighted by 24 white tapers and decorated with baskets of gladioli in pastel colors.

Nuptial music was provided by Iris Rosendahl at the piano who played "I Love You Truly," as a prelude, and "The Bridal Chorus" from Lohrengrin as the processional. "The Wedding March" from Mendelssohn was used as the recessional march.

Preceding the ceremony Miss Elizabeth Goll sang, "O, Promise Me," and after the ceremony she sang "Because."

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a white crepe dress, white hat and shoulder length veil and gold accessories. Her jewelry was her mother's diamond necklace and she carried a white Testament. Her corsage was of orchids.

She was attended by Miss Peggy Coobs who wore a dress of pale pink with white hat and corsage of roses. Harvey Ausborn, brother of the groom was best man and the ushers were Francis Sherwood, brother of the bride, and Dean Jacobs, schoolmate of the couple.

The bride's mother wore a Royal blue dress with white accessories and a corsage of red and white roses. The groom's mother wore an aqua blue dress with Navy blue accessories and corsage of roses.

After the ceremony a reception was held for the immediate relatives and close friends at the Sherwood home. Mrs. D. P. Anderson had baked and decorated a wedding cake which, after being cut by the bride, was served by Mrs. Moorehead of Rockwell, Mrs. Benn Coobs, Mrs. David Schwichtenberg and Mrs. John Chambers served the lunch.

A wedding dance and reception was held Monday evening in honor of the couple at the Community Hall. Tuesday they left on a wedding trip.

Both are graduates of the Klemme High School. Mrs. Ausborn was employed as telephone operator at Mason City and later at Klmme. Mr. Ausborn assisted his father in farming. The couple will reside on the Bachman farm southeast of Klemme next spring, which has been purchased by the Ausborns.

CHANGE LEASE TO FIT WEED CONTROL

New method of controlling weeds on rented farms are bringing about revisions in the landlord-tenant agreement.

The traditional practice of the owner furnishing materials and the tenant supplying the labor to fight weeds is being modified in some farm leases, I. W Arthur, agricultural economist at Iowa State College, points out.

If large patches of noxious weeds are present when a new tenant moves on a farm and custom spraying is necessary to control them many landlords now are paying for the custom work and materials the first year. The landlord has been furnishing all the materials and possibly some additional incentive for the tenant to get rid of small patches of weeds where only hand work is involved.

However, if noxious weeds show up while the tenant is living on the farm, the customary arrangement is for the landlord to furnish the materials and for the tenant to supply the labor to fight new weeds.

This, Arthur says, is true with both share and cash leases.

Some single-farm owners who rent the farm on a crop share basis have been purchasing half interest in spraying equipment and machinery. However, institutional owners and professional farm managers with a string of farms, hesitate to buy a share of the spraying equipment.

One advantage for the tenant to own the spraying equipment is that he can do custom spraying and spray his own livestock.

In-crop or pre-emergence, spraying presents a different problem than the conventional methods of controlling weeds. Controlling ordinary weeds by pre-emergence or in-crop spraying may be a substitution for one or more of the cultivations of corn, Arthur points out.

While the practice is not new that no general custom has been established, Arthur thinks that with a crop share lease the landlord would be paying for part of the old job of cultivating corn if he furnished half of the pre-emergence spray material.

However, he says that it is certainly worth the landlord's effort to control weeds. Therefore, he may chip in to some extent on pre-emergence spray materials if he thinks his weed problem is serious.

CLARION DEFEATED KLEMME IN NON-LEAGUE GAME

A fast, snappy Clarion team trimmed Klemme here Monday evening 7 to 2. Klemme was without the services of several of their regular players but it was a good game and well played with the exception of a few costly errors that gave Clarion their lead.

Liberty And Britt Play Close Ball Game At Britt

Liberty and Britt played a thriller of a ballgame at Britt Thursday night that ended up 7 to 4 in favor of Britt. The game was well played by both teams and it was nobody's game until the final inning.

Klemme Had Close Game With Crystal Lake Thursday Night

Klemme and Crystal Lake staged a thriller of a league soft ball game at Crystal Lake on Thursday night which ended in Klemme's favor 2 to 1. Klemme is still tied with Britt for top honors in the league.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Congress Fights Truman Proposals; High Crop Goals Set, Wheat Cut; Atomic Tests Assure New Power

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

CONGRESS:
Feudin' and Fightin'

Bitter recriminations resounded as the fight between President Truman and the GOP-controlled congress moved into a new round with convening of the extra session of the 80th congress.

In a dynamite-laden atmosphere, the President appeared before a joint session of the congress which he had labeled "one of the worst in history" to demand a sweeping anti-inflation economic program. The reception for both the President and his program was cool as Republicans launched their wrecking-crew tactics.

Defiant GOP leaders charged Mr. Truman with playing politics and prepared to play politics of their own. The net result, it appeared, would be a short special session.

Initial step in the GOP's program of obstruction was a decision that the extra session should consider only those recommendations made by Mr Truman which could "pass a test." This test, established by the majority conference, set the qualifications for congressional action as follows:

Proposed legislation must be emergency in character.

It must contain a problem of national importance.

It must be a program which can be processed properly within the time available to an emergency session.

This available time for processing would be no longer than a period of congress which would not "interfere with the proper conduct" of the autumn campaigns.

No appropriation bills were to be considered, nor would any consideration be given to confirmation of nominations which might be sent to the senate by the President.

Over all hung the threat of a Dixie Democrats' filibuster against the anti-poll tax bill, which would widen the rift between Mr. Truman and the southern wing of his party.

There were no surprises in the President's recommended legislative package. He proposed a reimposition of the excess profits tax, limited restoration of price controls, even more limited wage controls and enactment of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill.

WHEAT:
Goal Cut

As clogged elevators and enforced embargoes once again mark the nation's harvest of another bumper wheat crop, the department of agriculture recommends a cut of 8 per cent in wheat acreage in its preliminary recommendations for the 1949 crop year.

Although continued high production of other major grain commodities is recommended, a slight decrease is suggested for wheat acreage, which has increased sharply in recent years in response to war and relief needs.

Looking forward in a move to conserve the country's soil resources, the department points out that "a better balance between soil-conserving and soil-depleting crops will actually assure higher productivity over a longer period of years."

Farmers also are urged to provide for sufficient summer fallow and, in marginal areas, to plant grass seed on land which is not suitable for sustained production of crops.

Also considered in arriving at the wheat goal were this year's increased carry-over, prospects that the 1948 crop will be second largest in history and possibility of smaller demand because of improved crops in importing countries.

The department recommended wheat plantings for 1949 of 71.5 million acres which, with an average yield of 15 bushels an acre, would mean production of nearly 1.1 billion bushels. July estimate of 1948 wheat production was 1,241,751,000 bushels.

In setting another farm goal, the department recommended a beef cattle breeding herd of 15.5 million cows next January 1, a decrease of about 500,000 head. Better management, improved feeding practices and thorough culling, it was suggested, will "put the cattle industry in better position to supply the meat requirements of the increased population."

The recommendations are submitted to state agricultural councils for consideration. State goals and final national goals are determined on the basis of state review and recommendations.

Hands in Pockets

Face to face with the congress he had labeled "worst, save one," in history, President Truman was greeted by one of the coolest congressional receptions ever accorded a chief executive when he appeared before the special session. Only polite applause came occasionally from the galleries and from administration followers; Republicans kept their hands in their pockets.

A-BOMBS:
New Force

The veil of secrecy which has shrouded most of the post-war atomic energy experiments was lifted, a tiny bit at least, for the American public in the fourth semi-annual report of the atomic energy commission and an accompanying statement by President Truman.

Justifying the secrecy, the President contended that until controls are established on the international level to prevent use of atomic energy for military purposes "we cannot, as a nation, afford to disclose these secrets which make this new force the most deadly form of military weapon." With that statement, the American people, anxiously eyeing war clouds on the horizon, are inclined to agree.

Some measure of reassurance was contained in both reports, stressing the fact that the nation has gained new power in atomic weapons. Both disclosed that the secret tests of new type bombs at the proving grounds on Eniwetok island early this year were highly successful.

The commission's report, the fourth semi-annual summary to congress as provided by law, indicated there were three bombs used at Eniwetok in the spring project known as "Operation Sandstone." Principal study was "on the generation of nuclear explosion itself" rather than "on the effects of the nuclear explosion," as was the case in the earlier Bikini tests.

The report stressed developments of atomic energy research in medicine, agriculture, metallurgy, other sciences and industry. Radioactive materials have been given 229 institutions and commercial agencies for experimentation.

LIVING COSTS:
Hit Peak

They changed the name—from cost of living index to consumers price index—but they still can't change the trend—upward and ever upward.

In fact, the index struck an all-time high on June 15, with food prices reaching record-shattered levels, the bureau of labor statistics reports.

The index, which represents retail prices of goods and services bought by moderate income families in large cities, registered 171 7 per cent of the 1935-39 average.

Further increases are inevitable, too, for wheat prices hit an all-time high during the week ended July 17 and it takes about a month for their impact to be recorded in retail prices.

The new consumers price index is 9.3 per cent higher than a year ago; 28.8 per cent above June, 1946, when price controls generally were abandoned, and 74.1 per cent above the August, 1939, level. On V-J Day in 1945 the same index was 129.3 per cent of the 1935-39 average.

PRECARIOUS PERCH

Americans Seek Economic Security

Increasingly aware of the need for economic security for themselves and their families, Americans will expend approximately 15 billion dollars for that purpose in 1948, the Research Council for Economic Security estimates.

The estimate covers payments made under private or government organized plans to meet insecurity arising from death, old age, accident, sickness, disability, unemployment and other conditions.

Northeastern, middlewestern, and Pacific coast states have the largest measure of protection, both in total amounts and in per capita payments, the study discloses.

DRAFTEES:
Old Pals

In an endeavor to make the upcoming draftee as happy as a khaki-colored lark, the army is removing its "petty annoyances" as it completes plans to process men inducted under the first peacetime draft in history.

On orders of Gen. Omar Bradley, chief of staff, to remove "the petty annoyances that sent many World War II veterans away hating the army," training officers prepared to greet the recruit like an old friend of the family.

Only the finest officers and noncoms will handle the draftee, training officers promised. The recruit will even be given a $5 advance on his $75 a month pay the first day in camp so he won't be broke. He won't even have to wait to "tell it to the chaplain," as he'll be taken to the chaplain during his orientation days and urged "to let his hair down."

All of this will take place at eight major training centers which have been set up to receive the draftees and give them their basic training. They are Fort Knox and Camp Breckenridge, Ky.; Fort Riley, Kans.; Camp Chaffee, Ark.; Camp Pickett, Va.; Fort Ord, Calif.; Fort Jackson, S. C., and Fort Dix, N. J.

The standard 13-week army training course has been condensed into eight "tough" weeks. Later draftees will be selected for specialist training or sent directly to duty. About half of the draftees will see overseas duty, probably in Korea, Japan, Germany, Alaska, the Canal Zone, Hawaii or Caribbean defense area.

It Might Have Been

Had there been no World War II, no abdication of the late King Victor Emmanuel and no dissolution of the House of Savoy by vote (taking the crown away from ex-King Humbert), then Victor Emmanuel, pictured here, third of the line, might have been fated one day to sit on the throne of Italy. Seemingly the least unhappy about the turn of affairs is handsome, blond Victor Emmanuel, now at Geneva, Switzerland.

GERMANY:
Explosive

Germany remained an explosive issue in the strife-torn international picture.

As the titantic East-West struggle for Berlin continues, reports were current that four-power talks would be resumed in an attempt to settle the crisis there as well as to scan the entire European situation. The rumors circulated after top diplomats of the U. S., Britain and France were closeted in a series of conferences.

In the biggest air lift in history, U. S. and British planes continued to transport food and fuel to the beleaguered city. The big planes averaged 4,500 tons of essential goods daily in their effort to break the Russian blockade.

Violence broke out in the Russian sector of the capital city as thousands of Germans jammed banks to exchange their money for new Soviet-sponsored currency.

Although she looks like a prim schoolmarm, Berlin's woman mayor, Socialist Louise Schroeder, courageously defied Russia's order to dismiss the anti-Communist deputy police chief.

Small Woodlots Hold Key To Future Timber Supply

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—I have just had an interesting conversation with R. E. McArdle of the forest service of the department of agriculture, and I have discovered that I'm one of the people that the United States of America has to look to for its future lumber supply.

My father took up some of the last of the government forest land that was available in the Southwest. That little plot, along with the other privately-owned timberland straggling over the map of the U. S., makes up three-quarters of all the timber there is in the country. Only one-fourth of our forests are public property.

And three-fourths of this three-fourths is composed of small wood lots which average 60 to 70 acres. Furthermore much of it is not part of a farm being worked by an experienced farmer. A great deal is owned by people who don't live on the wood lot or near it (like me), and many of whom (also like me) wouldn't be able to tell a toothpick from a telephone pole if it weren't for their size.

Baukhage

Worse still, many farmers owning woodlots with valuable stands of timber on them don't know how to get their money's worth from that land or how to keep the wooded acres contributing to their livelihood as the rest of their farmland does. In other words, growing timber in this country has become to a large extent a side issue.

I am glad to report, after telling you all this bad news, that both the government and the lumber industry are trying to do something about this situation for the general, as well as for the individual, good.

For example, in 1937, the Crossett Lumber company gave the government 1,680 acres of typical second growth stands in southeastern Arkansas. I can't go into the program of experimental work that has been done there, but there is one item that affects our story.

R. R. Reynolds of the forestry service went to work on 40 acres of this area. He did the things any farmer can learn to do to a similar woodlot.

Last year Reynolds reported eight annual cuts which averaged a marketable value of more than $580 a year, and he had as much volume as when he started!

Of course, everybody hasn't Reynolds' know-how, but the government is helping to spread that know-how through its representatives or through state organizations. So is private enterprise.

Florida Teaches Youth Forestry Fundamentals

Thirteen years ago, Florida for example, began a forestry training camp for her Future Farmers of America members. On August 1 of this year, some 200 members of the FFA attended a two week camp at Camp O'Leno, about 60 miles west of Jacksonville, where they were taught, in the forest, the fundamentals of good forest practices.

The first week was for beginners who had had no previous forestry background; the second week was for those who had attended a previous camp.

During the first period they were taught fundamentals of gum farming—how to secure naval stores such as turpentine and rosin from slash and long-leaf pines; how to identify the commercially valuable trees and their use; how to farm forests as they farm cotton and other crops; how to protect their woodlots from fire; how to thin their stands of trees by cutting out the crooked, diseased, and other trees to allow the healthy ones room for more rapid growth; how to make seed beds grow tree seedlings.

In the second week, the lads were put through more training in advanced principles with emphasis on actual work in the forest. They fought a fire to learn the correct procedure.

They marked trees in a plot, estimated the board footage in a standing tree, cut it down, sawed it into lumber, and measured the lumber as a check against their previous estimates. They were taught how to chip trees in gum farming and how to market the gum. They were even put through a law enforcement course which stressed fighting the incendiarist in the woods. They were shown how to detect clues for purposely set fires, what evidence to collect and their rights under the law.

Health and recreation are not neglected in these camps, and at the end of the two week period the boys go home enthusiastic, ready to practice on their own woodlands. They take the message to their parents, of course, and make a report to the organizations to which they belong. Briefly they have gained a fundamental knowledge of the value of trees and how they can be grown for profit.

During the time Florida has run this camp, they have averaged 100 boys a year which means some 1,300 have been indoctrinated in the fundamentals of forestry. Today many of these graduates are leading citizens of their communities and many are growing trees for profit.

Program Extends To Other States

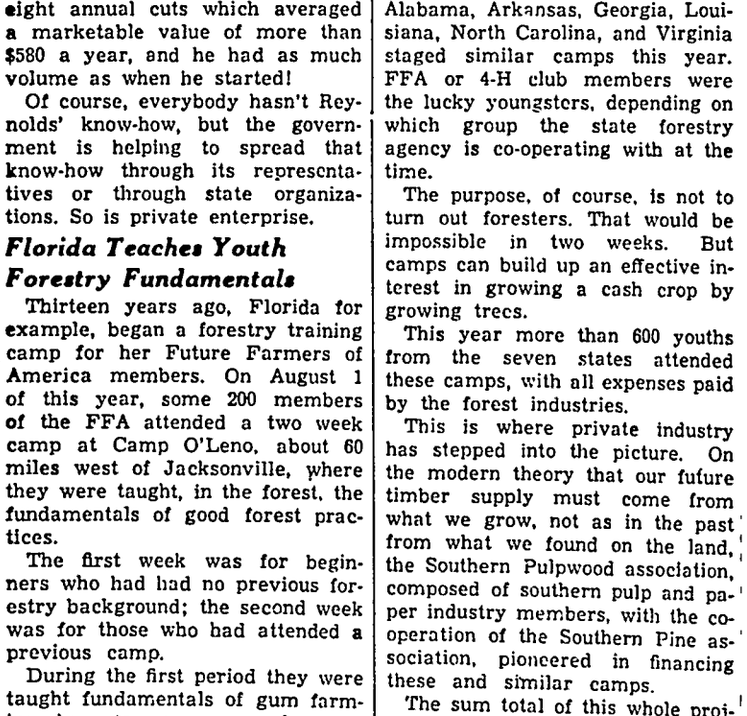
Nor is Florida the only state taking an interest in this new thinking regarding trees and youth. Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, and Virginia staged similar camps this year. FFA or 4-H club members were the lucky youngsters, depending on which group the state forestry agency is co-operating with at the time.

The purpose, of course, is not to turn out foresters. That would be impossible in two weeks. But camps can build up an effective interest in growing a cash crop by growing trees.

This year more than 600 youths from the seven states attended these camps, with all expenses paid by the forest industries.

This is where private industry has stepped into the picture. On the modern theory that our future timber supply must come from what we grow, not as in the past from what we found on the land, the Southern Pulpwood association, composed of southern pulp and paper industry members, with the cooperation of the Southern Pine association, pioneered in financing these and similar camps.

The sum total of this whole project adds up to this: Industry has joined forces with state agencies to interest youth in becoming successful Tree Farmers of America, and to turn to account what has been up to recently a wasteful sideline on the farms—a sideline which must supply an important part of America's current and future vital lumber needs.



Florida teaches the fundamentals of good forestry to FFA youth at annual summer camps. Trammel Green, nurseryman for the Florida forest service, is shown here instructing two boys in preparation of a seed bed. Here they are spreading pine straw over the freshly planted seed as a protective measure.

SOME time back we were discussing the affairs of baseball's state with Connie Mack. The part that luck plays came up for some chatter.

"In my opinion luck plays a small part, a very small part," Mack said, "with 154 games to play. There is only one spot that luck can figure rather heavily. This could be in some injury or illness striking at a key player, one who can't be replaced. This is about the worst luck you can get," he said.

MACK

So the Braves can be charged with the worst luck of the season in losing Eddie Stanky for practically the rest of the season. For despite what Branch Rickey and Leo Durocher thought about it, Stanky has been the most valuable, the most useful second baseman in the National league.

His absence from Brooklyn has accounted in large part for most of the Dodgers' doldrums earlier in the race. It has accounted for a loss of 100,000 in attendance, due to so many games lost that Stanky's presence could have won.

When the Stanky blow fell, Billy Southworth had just organized his cast into the most formidable team in the league. It had good catching and certainly one of the soundest pitching staffs in Johnny Sain, Warren Spahn, Bill Voiselle and Vernon Bickford.

Braves Had Hitters

The Braves had a good hitting outfield on hand. But above all in Stanky and Alvin Dark, the Braves had the strongest second-base combination in the circuit. And it might be added that Stanky was largely responsible for young Dark's fine play and his marked improvement.

On the day Stanky was hurt, both he and Dark were hitting .320. Both were among the first five among the league's best hitters. As a defensive combination they had no superior pair to face. Just how Stanky's substitute will work out has yet to be shown over a long stretch.

This could easily be the wrecking bad luck that Mack was talking about. The Braves may win the pennant without Stanky. With the pepper box around they were the best team in their league, the team one had to pick as the probable pennant winner. You know what would happen to the Cardinals if they lost Stan Musial or where the Indians would be without Lou Boudreau.

Athletics Have Pitchers

The fact that a majority of the experts, prophets, and soothsayers still are waiting for the Athletics to crack hasn't annoyed Mack too greatly. Still he hasn't liked it too much. The records show that he has the soundest and most consistent pitching staff in the league.

"And the facts show," Mack tells you, "that we have just about as good a ball club as the Yankees, Indians or Red Sox in other departments. It isn't as fast as it might be but it can hit and field and I certainly know of no other club that has more spirit. No club that has been up around the front for three playing months can be considered any morning glory. If Phil Marchildon were in his 1947 shape, we'd have a nice lead already set aside with better prospects on ahead."

Whatever happens, 1948 can be set down as one of Mack's bigger years. The veteran won his first American league pennant 46 years ago in 1902. He won again in 1905, 1910, 1911, 1913, 1914, 1929, 1930 and 1931. So it has been a matter of 17 years since the tall, thin old-timer has won a flag and he feels that he could make good use of his 10th pennant before retiring from the busy scene.

He had no idea this spring that he could do as well as he has to date. I feel pretty sure that back in early April, Mack gladly would have settled for a spot at the bottom of the first division.

Favorites Fade Out

At that time about all you could hear were the Yankees and the Red Sox. The Tigers and the Indians drew the next rounds of applause. What everyone overlooked was the value of six or seven good, consistent pitchers in a season where good pitching was extremely scarce. When such ball players as Eddie Joost and Hank Majeskie began acting like stars, the Athletics began showing dust to both Yankees and Red Sox.

They gave pretty fair proof of their intentions by opening the season in Boston and walloping the astonished Red Sox three times running. Shortly after this they moved up with the Cleveland Indians and began feeding Athletic dust to the rest of the league.

The Picture Changes

UNCENSORED DISPATCHES from behind the iron curtain have increased the fear that Russia may be ready for war now.

Hitherto diplomats felt certain that the Soviet did not want war for at least two or three years—until she could develop the A-bomb. But here are some developments which have taken place behind the iron curtain.

1. The Communist-controlled Czech government has received orders from Moscow to empty a large number of army barracks in western Czechoslovakia in preparation for the early arrival of large Russian troop concentrations. It's important to remember that Czechoslovakia is adjacent to the American zone of Germany. If this report is accurate, the Red army is moving up units to face U. S. troops in the American zone.

2. The Russians have ordered thousands of bilingual signposts erected all the way from the Soviet border to the German border for use of Red army divisions. Word that these signposts are being set up has leaked out through the Czech underground. They all point in the direction of Berlin and Paris.

3. Russia has occupied 15 new air bases in eastern Germany, west of the Soviet border. Some of these air bases are staffed with the Russian version of the B-29, copied from B-29s forced down in Siberia during the war.

4. Russia has quietly summoned home for consultation some of the most trusted diplomats in its foreign service, leaving relative second-stringers in charge of its embassies.

5. Word has gone out from Moscow for the immediate purge of all dissident and weak elements in the Communist party throughout Europe This means any Communist who doesn't toe the Moscow line unflinchingly is to be ousted. This order reportedly has the blessing of Premier Stalin. It is interpreted to mean that the Kremlin is gearing for a final showdown.

Reason for Worry

It has been two years since congress, after hot and hectic debates in the month of July, 1946, voted to sabotage price controls.

Here are the official figures showing the difference between controlled prices and uncontrolled prices since the end of OPA:

PRICE OF MEAT—upped 191 per cent since May 15, 1946.

RENTS — which remain under controls, increased only 7.6 per cent.

GAS AND ELECTRICITY—regulated by state and municipal commissions, have increased only 2 per cent.

GENERAL FOOD PRICES—have gone up 214.1 per cent over the 1935-39 average.

A Dramatic Touch

President Truman got some interesting suggestions on the Berlin crisis the other day from James Patton, rugged boss of the National Farmers union, who urged him to "Do something dramatic."

"If I were president," blurted the Rocky mountain farmer, "I would call Premier Stalin on the phone, tell him we had a bad situation on our hands and say I wanted to meet him in Berlin to talk it over."

"Jim," the President smiled, "I can't be dramatic. I'm not the dramatic type."

But he assured the farm leader that "ways can be worked out" to settle the explosive Berlin question without war.

Patton had one more question on the international situation.

"How close," he asked solemnly, "are we to war?"

The newspapers, Mr. Truman replied, have overplayed the Berlin tension. The Russians, he was convinced, do not want war.

"And we certainly don't want war," added the President.

Patton also told the President that, while congress had passed farm price supports, it was only the beginning of a long-range farm program. Farmers need other measures, such as soil conservation, rural electricity and aid to rural schools, he said.

U.N. Air Bases

Pentagon planners are dusting off a secret plan for a network of United Nations bases around the world in order to enforce the peace. About 50 strategic bases would be turned over to an international security force, according to this plan, which was first submitted by the air corps in 1942.

Military strategists argue that the United Nations must demonstrate that it means business—if it intends to stay in business. If a majority of nations jointly operated these bases, even a big nation like Russia would hesitate to attack.

(WNU Service)

The Big Town at Sunset:

Winchellebrities: James Farley studying five shiny new FDR dimes that a waitress innocently handed him in making change on a railroad diner. . . . Morton Downey, whose real first name is Sean. . . . John Payne (of the Magic Lanterns) supping solo in the Cub room. Leading men don't seem natural without a lady in the scene. . . . Henry Fonda dodging clawtographers congesting the "Mr. Roberts" stage door by making a clean getaway via the front entrance.

The Wild West is gone! Bingham Canyon (Utah) recently became the last town in the Far West to pass a law making it sinful to tote a gat without it being registered.

Times Square Ticker: Marion Davies' former beach mansion at Santa Monica now is run by Joe Drown, owner of swanky Bel Air (Beverly Hills), as an exclusive beach rendezvous. The rates are merely $70 a day. Filled to capacity, however. . . . The revived George M. Cohan's "45 Minutes to Broadway" will introduce several Cohan lilts the family found in old trunks. . . . From Elsa's col'm: "I lunched at the house of commons in London. I love lunching there. It's become sort of a habit." Yes, dear, and blimey hif hit hisn't beginnin' to show!

Midtown Vignette: They assure you it happened the other day . . . The personnel manager of a large advertising firm was interrupted by an office boy who asked if he could have the following day off—so he could attend a meeting . . . "What kind of meeting?" sniffed the office mgr. "A union meeting?" . . . "No," said the office boy, "a meeting of the General Motors board of directors. I'm one of the larger stockholders!" . . . The agency is Federal Advertising, and the office boy-stockholder is named William Dayton Holmes.

Broadway Piffle: One of the B'way 10 per centers is making a fortune booking nothing but professional "amateur" shows. . . . Gi-Gi Durston (the Stork club canary) says when they bill you as a "Society Singer" people think it means you can't sing. . . . That lovely thing at Steeplechase (who tests all the daredevil rides) is Daphne Dunbar, a Barbizon cover gal. Does it on the side for the thrill of it—makes plenty modeling. . . . Passersby do double-takes at the sign in a used-car window near 54th and B'way One imported (Italian) convertible has a price tag on it reading "$8,500." . The newest midtown phone exchange is LUxembourg 2. (Ran out of American names, no doubt.)

Ulzo, the Phoenix (Ariz.) C. of C. is trying to get the city fathers to ban cowboys from walking through hotels and other public buildings with their spurs on.

The Cinemagicians: A haymaker among hard-hitting mellers, "Canon City" explodes a shot-by-shot replica of the famed Colorado jailbreak. Its breakneck pace keeps the excitement winging. . . . Another thrillodrama is "Raw Deal." This is a tip-top tingler showing T-men in action that suits the spine to a T. . . . "I, Jane Doe" offers some familiar murder mystery angles, but Ruth Hussey's curves are far more arresting. . . . "The Argyle Secrets" unreels a plot that's easier to see through—than see . . . "The Flame" is one of those dululoids that won't set any box offices on fire.

Side-Show: Florence, the newsstand impresario (at Madison and 53rd), giving free papers to the first 100 patrons to celebrate her birthday . . . Relics from the Collyer mansion in Harlem incongruously displayed near the atom bomb souvenirs of Hiroshima—at Hubert's museum flea circus . . . Mrs. Dewey's charming manner of not answering reporters' questions in the new steels

Editorial: Robert Best, convicted of treason against the United States and sentenced to life, has obtained a stay of sentence. . . . 250,000 honorable American boys got death on the beaches of Normandie, Okinawa and Iwo Jima. . Best told the American soldiers (fighting in the field) that they were wrong and Hitler was right. . . . He doubtless meant it was physically safer to be a traitor behind a Nazi microphone than in an American uniform supporting the flag. . . . Best declared (when sentenced) he wouldn't change places with anyone. . . . On behalf of 250,000 gold stars this is to tell traitor Best that a short trip from Main street to Arlington is better than the long and dirty road from Nuremburg to Alcatraz.

It looks like Eisenhower would rather be remembered as a man who did so much to make America safe for democracy—not one who made Washing safe for the Democrats.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

SCRIPTURE: Acts 9:36-42; Matthew 25:31-46.
DEVOTIONAL READING: Proverbs 31:10-31

Religion: Hand-Sewn

Lesson for August 22, 1948

THE NEIGHBORS didn't know what Tabitha's ideas were. She never went down in history as a great thinker What church she attended, whether she ever took part in a prayer-meeting, what her spiritual life was like, the neighbors did not say But they cried when she was dead. She was a good woman, they knew. When Simon Peter came that way, they did not tell him about Tabitha's prayers or her peace of conscience. No doubt she had these But what the neighbors brought in to show how good their friend had been, was — "coats and garments." All made by hand, her hands; made for her poorer neighbors, widows. In those days widows were not protected by life insurance, social security or annuity plans. They could not go out and earn big money in factories. To be a widow, as a rule, meant to be in need of help. Too many of them starved. So Tabitha spent her time making clothes for the widows of her city.

Dr. Foreman

Full of Good Works

THE BIBLE says she was "full of good works." It does not say she was full of faith or full of love. Just full of good works. We can be pretty sure the faith and love, the religion, was there, but it was the good works that people noticed.

Religion in Tabitha's house was translated into the language of coats and skirts. Religion always has to be translated into something we can understand. Religion uses words, of course; books full of them. We cannot get along without them. They stand for something. But where the Christian religion is concerned, we cannot stop with words.

Would They Want You Back?

THERE MUST have been a number of deceased Christians in Joppa, but the only one who seems to have been worth a miracle to bring back to life was this woman, Tabitha, or Dorcas. Her life was over, yet it was a life worth living again.

How many people would be worth bringing back to life again? How many funerals would the neighbors want done in reverse? Not many, maybe, but if the neighbors voted at each funeral, as they did at Tabitha's, on the question, "Do we want this person back again?" they would usually vote for people like Tabitha, whose religion was all hand-sewn.

What Is Service?

SERVICE IS a word much used in Christian circles. We even have the world around us using the word. Department stores, government agencies, radio manufacturers, filling stations, all offer service. The trouble is that much of this is something for which you have to pay. And much so-called service is simply mending something that was not done right in the first place. Tabitha's service was of a different kind. It was genuine doing for people who couldn't do much for themselves and who certainly could not do anything in return.

Even among Christians, when we think of service we set our sights sometimes too high. We think of Telemachus, who stopped the brutal sport of gladiators murdering one another on Roman holidays. We think of great missionaries or settlement workers, or Christian statesmen like Gladstone or Kuyper. All honor to such men and women; they inspire us all. Yet they discourage us, too. For these great Christians are "special" people; they had outstanding talent, some of them even genius. They had opportunities given only to a few, opportunities that do not come in every one's lifetime.

Religion in the Hands

WE SHOULD REMEMBER this Tabitha or Dorcas. All she had was her hands and some pieces of cloth. Her only opportunity was a poor city filled with poor people. Her only talent was one most women have: Plain sewing.

Yet the Tabithas, the Dorcases, make the backbone of Christianity. They are the salt of the church, the salt of the earth. In your own town, in your own community, if the Christian religion is loved and respected, it is not because of the famous preachers; it is because of the humble doers, the people whose Christian religion goes to their hands.

Harsh Laxatives are NOT necessary for most people

The juice of a lemon in a glass of water, when taken first thing on arising, is all that most people need to insure prompt, normal elimination.

No more harsh laxatives that irritate the digestive tract and impair nutrition! Lemon in water is good for you!

Generations of Americans have taken lemons for health—and generations of doctors have recommended them. They are rich in vitamin C; supply valuable amounts of B_1 and P. They alkalinize, aid digestion.

Not too sharp or sour, lemon in water has a refreshing tang—clears the mouth, wakes you up. It's not a purgative—simply helps your system regulate itself. Try it 10 days.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

NOTICE OF A PROPOSED RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY

TO ALL INTERESTED PROPERTY OWNERS

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Town Council of the Town of Klemme, Iowa at a meeting held on the 9th day of August, 1948, proposed and placed on file a Resolution of Necessity whereby it was deemed necessary and advisable for proper sanitary regulations and for the preservation of the public health of the inhabitants of said town, to build, construct and put in place lines of storm sewer in said town, as follows:

1 An 8 inch storm sewer commencing near the West line of Third Street, and thence running East along a line approximately 20 feet South of and parallel to the center line of Main Street to the County road running south-north on the East Section line, Section 31, T95N, R23W, including 6 laterals to connect in storm intakes, all on Main Street.

2 An 8 inch storm sewer commencing near the West line of Third Street, and thence running West along a line approximately 23 feet South of and parallel to the center line of Main Street to approximately the East line of Second Street, including one manhole and one lateral to connect in storm intakes, all on Main Street.

Said sewers to be provided with all necessary manholes, lampholes, flushtanks, and other appurtenances as may be necessary

Said sewers to be constructed in strict accordance with the plans and specifications therefor prepared by Rowat & Murray, Engineers, and which are now on file in the office of the Town Clerk, having been duly approved by this council and by the State Board of Health.

YOU ARE FURTHER HEREBY NOTIFIED that it is proposed to pay the cost of said improvements by a special assessment or assessments against abutting or adjacent property as provided by statute and in accordance with the plat and schedule now on file in the office of the Town Clerk of the Town of Klemme, Iowa.

YOU ARE FURTHER HEREBY NOTIFIED that the Town Council of Klemme, Iowa will meet on the 13th day of September, 1948 at 7 30 P M. in the Council Chambers in said Town of Klemme, Iowa, for the purposes of considering said Resolution at which time said Resolution may be amended and adopted or adopted as proposed

YOU ARE FURTHER HEREBY NOTIFIED that any person affected by said proposed improvement or the special assessments to be levied therefor may appear and object thereto at the time and place mentioned or may at any time previous thereto file objections with the Town Clerk Any person failing to appear at said time and place or to have on file with the Town Clerk objections to said improvement contemplated, in said Resolution of Necessity or to proposed assessments for same shall be deemed to have waived all rights to object thereto.

THE CASE OF THE BEAUTIFUL FLAG

The man held the hand of the little girl as they walked through the majestic halls of the capitol building in Des Moines. They stopped before a flag in a stand. The man spread it out for the little girl.

"Oh! Isn't it beautiful, daddy?"

"One of the prettiest I've ever seen."

The flag showed an eagle in flight, carrying a flowing ribbon on which were imprinted these words. "Our Liberties We Prize And Our Rights We Will Maintain." It was the State Flag of Iowa.

"But daddy," asked the little girl, "If it's so pretty where do they keep it? Why haven't we seen it before?"

The man shook his head wonderingly and let the silken folds drop into place. They walked on down the hall and the little girl looked back at the flag.

This was a daughter of Iowa who perhaps had never seen the flag of her own state, and a father who had not seen enough of it. This incident manifies the concern of state officials, including Governor Robert D Blue and Rodney Q. Selby, director of the Iowa Development Commission, relating to the display of the Iowa flag.

"Our state flag should be as well-known as the Stars and Stripes and its presence as mandatory," said Director Selby

Director Selby cited Greater Webster City Week last May as an example of the proper use of the state flag. An Iowa flag with the American flag on each of the electroliers in the business district, he said. The state flag, he said, should be shown at all mportant events.

He suggested that cities, orgnizations and schools wishing aid to procure price lists or manufactures of the Iowa state flag contact the Iowa Development Commission.

Electrification Advances Push-Button Farming Era

You've probably heard some day dreamer sit around and forecast that someday all a farmer will have to do is rest in his easy chair, push one button to milk the cows, another button to feed the chickens and another to chop the wood. Well, all that is nice to think about, anyway, but of course few think modern farming ever will reach that stage.

Still, there is lot of push-button farming going on in the United States, if you can call an electric switch a push-button. The department of agriculture reports that more than half the farms of the country—about 53 per cent—now have electricity to help do the chores. Back in 1935, only 10 per cent of the nation's farms had electricity. Incidentally, 1935 was the year the rural electrification program began.

In a survey, it was found that the first piece of apparatus that a farmer buys when he gets electricity is a radio. Next in popularity seem to be washing machines, electric irons, refrigerators, water pumps, cream separators, chicken brooders and milking machines. More than 400 different uses for electricity were found on the farm.

REA officials say that the rural electrification job is only a little more than half done, however, and it's destined to spread faster and farther in the next few years. In fact, if completely favorable conditions existed, it would be possible for American farms to be totally electrified within five years.

Childhood Accidents Take Toll of 20,000 Every Year

Each year almost 20,000 boys and girls under 20 years of age die in the United States as a result of accidents.

That sad fact is cited by extension family life specialists in an effort to make parents realize that something must be done about it.

Principal causes of child accidents in the home are burns, falls, poisoning, wounds (from knives, scissors and other dangerous articles), swallowing playthings, electric shock, suffocation, drowning and gunshot wounds.

"Protect the child," say the specialist, "by making his environment free of accident hazards. Of course, there are certain dangerous activities in which he simply should not engage. Provide the child with a chance to develop himself, to learn things by doing. And condition him by training; teach him the correct method of doing things while his habits are being formed. Finally, teach him to recognize danger and meet it, since all hazards are not avoidable."

Rheumatic Fever

Most of the heart disease in people under the age of 21 is caused by rheumatic fever. It has been estimated that there are about half a million cases of rheumatic heart disease in the United States. The disease seems to be caused by certain streptococcus germs and other factors. From time to time most of us suffer from "streptococcus sore throat." A few people, especially children, seem to have an inherited sensitivity to these germs. These sensitive people suffer from rheumatic fever, which is an inflammation of the lining membranes of the heart and of the joints. In young children it is the heart that is damaged most. In older children and adults, the joints are very painful and swollen. The disease has a tendency to affect many joints. Thus the trouble seems to flit from joint to joint. Early symptoms often are overlooked because the pains are not severe.

Near-Sightedness Increases

Near-sightedness appears to be increasing sharply among Americans, according to Better Vision institute. Some ophthalmic practitioners say that their cases of myopia have increased as much as one-third during the past decade. Others in the ophthalmic professions assert that while near-sightedness may be growing in prevalence, much of the apparent increase results from the fact that people are taking better care of their eyes. Visual tasks requiring good distance vision have expanded greatly during the past quarter of a century. Chief of these new visual tasks relate to motion pictures and automobiles. A person with uncorrected myopia is uncomfortable in a motion picture theatre and a very poor driver in an automobile. The motion picture and the automobile, it is asserted, have stimulated millions of near-sighted persons to adjust their eyes to the expanded needs of modern living.

Variety in Bananas

Besides being eaten raw, bananas may be boiled, fried or baked and served as a vegetable or as a substitute for potatoes and other starch foods. Often they are boiled and served along with beans, rice and tortillas. When peeled, sliced, fried in lard and salted, they resemble French fried potatoes, but they retain their banana flavor. Dried green bananas or plaintains sometimes are ground into flour. The preparation of banana bread is not recommended without the addition of wheat flour, but powdered bananas can be used in making gruel, soups and puddings.

NO DAMAGE

A Sumner resident gave himself, not a "hot foot" but a "hot knee" recently. He went to sleep in his car, scrunched down in the seat, and his knee pushed in the cigarette lighter. A passerby noticed smoke coming out of the car and turned in an alarm.

40 YEARS

Back about 1908, Mrs. Ellen Coyle lost a gold ring while living with her daughter, Mrs. Bridgette Lawler, in Ogden Last week, her great-grandson, James Lawler found the ring, still in good shape after its 40 years outside and bearing the legend, "P. H. C. to Ellen C., May 12, 1891." Mrs. Coyle, the original owner, died in 1909.

LOST AND FOUND

Glenn Van Kleeck, Nashua farmer, lost a billfold last week containing $200 in checks and over $100 in cash. After searching all about, he remembered climbing a fence at the Will Harnish farm, to which he had hauled cattle He went there and found the billfold in the cornfield after an hour's search.

WRONG ANSWER

Clay Rusk, the Des Moines radio "quiz master" who has asked many a question on the air, was asked one himself last week. To the inquiry, "How fast were you driving," his reply cost him five dollars in traffic court there.

ESCAPED

As Delbert Blanchard of Lone Rock drove a tractor last week, a jug of water which was on the machine started to slide off. He grabbed for it and the tractor turned over with him. Except for a bruised back and arm and the loss of one shoe and a pants-pocket in the scramble, he was unharmed.

SKUNK

John Strodtman of Emmetsburg heard a skunk n his chicken house last week. Not having a shotgun handy, he sent his faithful dog, "Shep", in to kill the marauder. Shep went in and came back immediately, carrying a chicken which he carried off and ate. A little disgusted, Mr. Strodtman had his son bang on the chicken-house wall while, Strodtman stood with the door. The first creature to come out felt the weight of Mr. Strodtman's club. It was another prize hen. Finally the skunk came out and Mr. Strodtman killed it with one blow Nobody got sprinkled.

DANGER

Heye Bleeker of Grundy Center fell asleep in his lawn chair last week. The chair collapsed catching a finger and tearing off the first joint. Mr. Bleeker had to finish the job with a pocket knife before he could free himself. One is not safe anywhere nowadays.

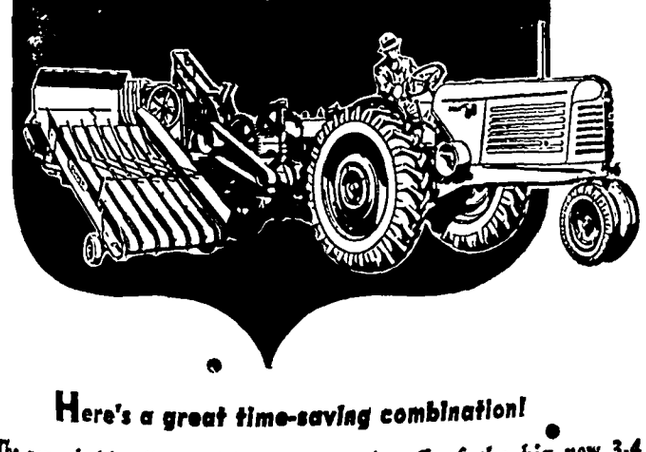
Speed up Baling with the New OLIVER "88" and Automatic-Hydraulic Threader



Here's a great time-saving combination!

The remarkable direct drive power take-off of the big new 3-4 plow Oliver "88" tractor is one of the greatest boons to baling. To "ease" the baler's load or clear the machine, just step on the clutch of your "88"—the Oliver power take-off keeps on running! Let out the clutch and you're on your way again. No time wasted by declutching, gear shifting, and reclutching!

Come in and check the high-tonnage features of the Oliver-Ann Arbor Automatic-Hydraulic Threader Pick-up Baler, too. Neat, firm, sliced bales that come apart in good-sized sections are produced.

You can get almost any combination of ground speed and drawbar pull you want. With its 6-forward-speed transmission, 6-cylinder engine and Fuel Miser governor, you can fit the tractor to the load—and use only the fuel that's needed to do the work.

There are many other valuable, money-saving farm features, plus a choice of three great engines for the fuel you prefer, including a farm-engineered diesel that will be available later . . . interchangeable cast and stamped steel wheels and basic interchangeability of mounted tools with other Row Crop models.

ATING BLUEGRASS ASTURE IS IMPORTANT

failure of many spring seedings makes the job owing the old bluegras: s even more importan' r, says E. S. Dyas, agro- at Iowa State College. rated bluegrass pasture much to carry livestock next summer, particularn other feed supplies run ng should be done now, Dyas, both to correct soil and to allow time for owing. Applications made plowing make it easier e trucks to get onto the Plowing or disking prelime loss by washing this er shallow plowing or on the contour may be to tear up the sod. Dyas ot to worry about hurting rass—it will come back enough. Disking on the is sufficient where there are poor stands of grass or where fields are badly cut up with gullies. In addition to mixing the lime with the soil, it is a good start on seedbed preparation.

When introducing bromegrass, Dyas recommends plowing late in the fall to retard the bluegrass until the brome can get a better start.

Mixtures of bromegrass and sweetclover or brome and alfalfa can be seeded to particular advantage in August, or early September in the southern part of the state. In this way they will provide full grazing next year. However, red and alsike clover cannot be seeded in late summer because of the lack of moisture.

NEW PRODUCTS PREVENT HOUSEHOLD DAMPNESS

Many homemakers are finding new products on the market helpful against damage from dampness in their households this summer. The new preparations, says Fannie Gannon, Iowa State College home management specialist, mean less mustiness, mildew and rust, fewer moisture stains and warped drawers and less chance of furniture with loosened glue.

Developed during the war to keep the contents of packing cases dry, the silica gels and other substances have many advantages over calcium chloride, which has long been used against dampness.

They may be used anywhere, in or out of the container. They can be dried out again. They don't drip as they take in the moisture, so containers for the liquid are unnecessary When no more moisture can be absorbed and drying out or replenishing is in order, the gels change color.

Use the new product on closet floors or shelves, suggests Miss Gannon. Or enclose them in trunks, bureau drawers or clothes bags. The label on the package gives directions as to the quantity and method to use. Many retail stores now carry such a product.

MEN SUFFER MORE FARM ACCIDENTS THAN WOMEN

If you are a farmer between the ages of 25 and 45, you are living in the most dangerous period of your life.

In a recent survey of farm accidents, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics found that men led in all types of accidents, except one—that of burns and electric shock, where women paced the field.

Aside from this one point, life on the farm is far more dangerous for the men in the family About four times as many farm men and boys between 14 and 64 suffered injuries as did farm women and girls.

Nearly 65 percent of the children under 14 that were injured were boys.

Falls injured more farm people than any other kind of accident, most commonly from steps and chairs. Falls from vehicles ranked high on the list.

To prevent accidents, Norval Wardle, farm safety specialist at Iowa State College, has listed three cardinal rules which should be observed during National Week, July 25-31, and all through the year:

1 Watch your health. If you don't feel well your reactions are slower.

2. Plan your work. Know what you're doing and how to do it safely.

3. Work efficiently. The efficient way is the safe way. It also reduces fatigue

NO HARM TO WILDLIFE WHEN DDT USED RIGHT

DDT may be used for insect control around farm ponds, streams, trees and underbrush without fear of injuring fish or wildlife if it is applied in recommended insect dosages.

Applied in alrge enougn quantities, DDT will kill wild animals, birds and fish, warns Iowa State College extension wildlife specialist Robert Moorman. However, Iowans need not fear using the chemical on insects as long as they apply correct dosages in approved treatments.

Birds and mammals are unaffected by as much as 2 pounds of DDT per acre, according to federal and state college studies made during the past 3 years. Frogs, toads and other amphibians can withstand as much as 1 pound of DDT per acre of water surface except in ponds less than 5 inches deep.

Fish and other acquatics are most easily killed by DDT, according to Moorman. Common Iowa game and pan fish, such as bass, bluegills and croppies are affected by from 0.2 to 1 pound of DDT per acre. The general limit of fish tolerance is about 0.2 pound actual DDT per water surface acre.

Emulsion from DDT is somewhat more harmful to fish than either oil solution or dust because it spreads through water at all depths. However, during the 1947 Iowa fly-control campaign a 0.2 pound emulsion, sprayed by airplane, had no harmful effect on goldfish in outdoor pools, fish in small streams, or bees, although some bees appeared temporarily irritated and angered, Moorman said

Care should be taken to avoid accidental double application, or excessive spray drift. Cities and towns planning a fly and mosquito control program should make sure not more than 0.2 pound of DDT per acre is applied over stream and pond areas. The old adage that "if a little does good, a lot will do even better" does not apply in using DDT, Moorman says.

On Extended Vacation Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Jorgenson, Jr. and children, Judy and Ray III left Sunday evening for Amherst, Texas, where they will visit Mrs. Jorgenson's folks, Mr and Mrs. N. A. Vaughter for 3 weeks when Judy will return to Klemme to attend school. Mr. and Mrs. Vaughter will take care of the baby, Ray III while his parents, together with Mr. and Mrs. Eldon Smith of Carlsbad, New Mexico go on a trip to Washington, D. C., Altantic City, New Jersey and the New England states. They epxect to go up into the state of Maine on the trip and will return home the last of September.

FUEL OIL TANKS SHOULD BE FILLED THIS SUMMER

It may be warm weather now, but Iowa farmers should begin filling domestic fuel-oil tanks This advice comes from Dale Hull, Iowa State extension agricultural engineer.

Roads are much better now, and your oil man can fill the barrels more easily when the sun is shining than when the snow is falling next winter More important is the fact that filling fuel tanks now helps oil supplies build up a back-log and avert heavy demands in early winter As most people remember, critical situations developed last winter when too many wanted oil at one time.

Hull recommends checking the fuel tanks when they are low to determine if any moisture has accumulated since they were last cleaned. Filling the tank completely full also prevent any possibility of the inside of the tank rusting.

Home heating plants should be checked and any repairs that oil-burning furnaces or stoves might need should be ordered before the heating seasons begins, says Hull. Loose connections that cause leaks should be fixed now to prevent fire hazards later.

Nature's Ravages

Insects, disease, storm damage and similar happenings have caused far greater loss to American forests than removal of trees by lumbering. Studies indicate that in the 300-odd years since 1630, disease, insects and storm damage took a total of 5,426 billion board feet of growing trees. In addition, 1,698 billion feet were lost in forest fires. In the same 300-year period, the lumber cut is estimated at 3,259 billion feet. Nature's own ravages were almost twice as great as man's use of the trees for construction material. Even clearing woodlands for farms and cities or for fuel did not make as heavy inroads as natural causes.

Fort Leavenworth History

Fort Leavenworth, Kas., was first established as a military prison in 1874. From 1895 to 1906 the department of justice operated a federal prison on the site until the present federal penitentiary was completed. In 1915 the designation was changed from military prison to disciplinary barracks. Latest figures indicate the population of the barracks as 1,213. It has a capacity of 2,000. Some of the buildings are more than 100 years old, although the majority are of modern construction.

Uncle Sam Says

As you drive along country roads you will see one of America's most familiar scenes—farmers pitching hay. From this scene has come a phrase you have used many, many times—making hay while the sun shines. Well, niece and nephew, that's exactly what you are doing when you stack up United States Savings Bonds. You're making plenty of future security when the going is good, when a few extra dollars has been added to your take-home pay through the new income tax law . . . and when you should be acting for your future security.

Child Death Rate Declines But Accident Toll Is High

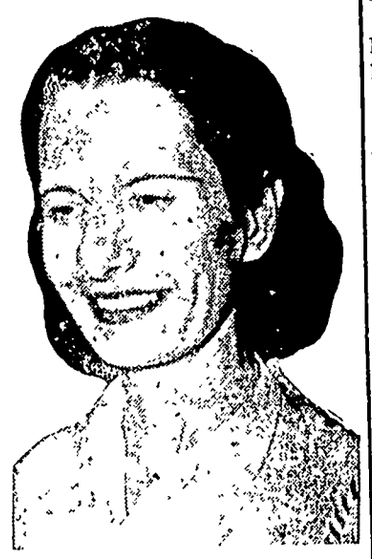
Although the death rate among children in the age group 1 to 14 has dropped 60 per cent since 1930, accidents still are taking too high a toll, Metropolitan Life Insurance company reports on the basis of a recent survey.

"Every one of the leading causes of death in childhood has shown a marked decline," the company's statisticians reported. "The improvement for each of the major diseases was well over 50 per cent at every age period, and the reduction was as much as 90 per cent for diarrhea and enteritis among very young children."

But, the report said, the relative decline in deaths from accidents, while considerable, was well below that from disease.

"Among boys 5 to 14 years old the number of lives lost in accidents is more than twice the combined total for the communicable diseases of childhood, together with tuberculosis, pneumonia, rheumatic fever and appendicitis," it said. "There is urgent need for the accident prevention movement to intensify its efforts in the field of child safety."

Dynamite Girl



Des Moines, Ia., Special: Helen Howe (above), Indian princess, Hollywood stunt actress, and now the famous "Princess of Dynamite," will give midwesterners a new type of thrill here this month. Her stunt as the dynamite princess will be featured on the Iowa State Fair's two "Thrill Day" programs, Saturday, Aug. 28, and Thursday, Sept. 2. Miss Howe climbs into a wooden casket alongside five sticks of dynamite. At a signal, she pulls the switch that fires the dynamite and blows the casket to bits. If all goes well, Helen comes out unharmed, except for a groggy moment and a few slight burns.

THE IMPENDING BATTLE

The popcorn, peanuts and lemonade carnivals, called party conventions, have folded and the road companies now are assembling. It is Truman and Barkley in "A Trailer Named Desire" versus Dewey and Warren in "Make Mine Pennsylvania Avenue"

The critics hold that in order to win the Democrats will have to get Oscar Hammerstein to rewrite the script and add numbers by Berlin and Rogers.

They say the show should be called, "Life Without Father," or "Franklin In the Wings"

They contend that the Dewey production has everything Ringling Brothers have except the Night Before Christmas pageant and Gargantua, and that put up against the Democratic offering it is like "Oklahoma" versus the flea circus. But [illegible] things happen in the world of politics and entertainment. The old saying, "Never count the gross receipts before you read the morning-after reviews," still is good advice.

Many a show has clicked despite bad preview notices and many an entertainment that was called sure fire on the road flopped in the ultimate test. The one big advantage the Dewey-Warren production has is that no show ever has run 16 years without boring the cash customers.

This department doesn't think the Democrats could win this time if they added the original cast of "Harvey," gave away free dishes and admitted women and children free. But there's no business as uncertain as show business except election business, and you never can tell.

Harry Truman emerged from the Democratic convention as the most dignified, gamest and most appealing figure, thanks to the quaint conduct of the opposition. He won sympathy just as a theater straw wins it when the rest of the cast tries to give him the works and even the stagehands drop sand bags from the flies You can't dislike him any more than you could dislike Denman Thompson in "The Old Homestead"

He was called on four years ago to step into a leading part played to the hilt for 12 years by one of the greatest matinee idols, all around showmen and top scene-stealers of all time. Could Citation have succeeded the leading man in "Three Men on a Horse?" We ask you!

Harry was the pitcher called in when the bases were full, the fighter sent in for the emergency bout and the pianist called to substitute for the Toscanini orchestra. He never knew whether he was acting as a president or being used as a floating target.

And on top of all that, the law of averages, the turn of the wheel, the theory of cycles and the human desire for a change in billing all worked against him. Even people who had been for tarring and feathering all Republicans for years began wanting to trade in the old model for something new.

The Republicans, farther north for 16 years than Peary or Cook ever got, suddenly found the ice thawing on the wings. And now there is every indication that they can safely discard their snowsuits, throw away their pemmican supplies and reach for a White House instead of an

Yale Canvasses Country For Col. Trumbull Canvas

A nation-wide hunt for the paintings of John Trumbull, visual recorder of the American Revolution, has been instituted by a Yale professor.

Theodore Sizer, professor of the history of art at Yale, issued the call for information about the Trumbull paintings in the "Yale University Library Gazette". The first such request for assistance was made by Professor Benjamin Siliman, 2d, in 1882 in the "American Art Rveview".

Sizer, working under a Guggenheim fellowship, is a noted authority on the "patriot-artist". He has compiled the first thorough check list of Trumbull's works, and the recent acquisition by the Yale library of Trumbull's notebook, containing a list of the artist's earlier works, has encouraged Sizer to seek elsewhere for further information.

Col. Trumbull was responsible for the design of the original Yale Gallery, the first such art museum in the United States connected with an educational institution. The purpose of the search is to complete a check list of his works and discover their location.

Col. Trumbull's paintings are richly steeped in the tradition of Yale, New Haven and Connecticut, as well as the revolutionary period. According to Prof. John Marshall Phillips, director of the Yale art gallery, the artist seemed to have a faculty for appearing on the scene of action just as history was being made. He, therefore, gave the U. S. many pictorial records, otherwise unobtainable, of this country's early background.

ANY VEGETABLES you like may be used in a soup combination, but the processing should be done in a pressure cooker for vegetables unlike tomatoes are a non-acid food and need more processing.

If the garden is coming to the end of its yield, here's a good batch of soup that can be put up from it:

End-of-Garden Soup
(Makes 3 quarts)

- 2 parsnips, peeled
- 2 medium-sized potatoes
- 4 carrots, scraped
- 2 cups quartered, peeled tomatoes
- 2 bunches celery, cut
- 1 sweet red pepper, trimmed and cut in strips
- 1/4 pound spinach, washed and shredded
- 1 cup cut green beans
- 2 quarts water

Clean all vegetables thoroughly before preparing. Cut in rather small pieces. Place in soup kettle, add water and simmer for two to three minutes. Pack while hot into clean jars; add one teaspoon salt to each quart. Adjust lids; process in pressure cooker, 60 minutes at 10 pounds pressure for pints, or 70 minutes at 10 pounds pressure for quarts.

(Makes 4 pints)

- 10 tomatoes
- 1 quart chopped sweet red peppers
- 1 cup finely chopped white onions
- 1 hot red pepper, chopped
- 1 quart sugar
- 2 tablespoons salt
- 5 cups vinegar
- 1 tablespoon celery seed
- 1 tablespoon ground cinnamon
- 1 teaspoon ground cloves

Scald tomatoes, remove skins and cores. Clean and chop remaining vegetables. Heat to boiling in a large kettle and cook vigorously for one and one-half hours. Add spices tied in two or three thicknesses of cheesecloth and cook one-half hour longer until the mixture is thickened. Remove spice bag. Pour into hot sterile jars and seal immediately.

Chunk Pickles
(Makes 8 pints)

- 6 pounds large cucumbers
- 3 1/4 cups salt
- 3 quarts water
- 2 tablespoons alum
- 1 quart vinegar
- 8 cups sugar
- 2 2-inch sticks cinnamon
- 2 blades mace
- 1 tablespoon whole cloves

Wash cucumbers; place in stone crock or jar; cover with cold brine made of salt and water; let stand two weeks. Remove cucumbers from brine, wash, trim off stem ends and cut crosswise into one-inch pieces. Cover with cold water; add alum; let stand overnight. Drain; wash well. Combine remaining ingredients and bring them to a boil. Pour immediately over cucumber chunks. Repeat the process for three mornings, reheating the syrup every time. On the fourth morning, place cucumbers in jars and pour hot syrup over them. Seal at once.

NO TWO ALIKE

By LOUIS MALLEN

WHAT puzzled Paul most was what made girls vulnerable and moon-eyed whenever his twin brother, Peter, was about. There was no denying it, girls usually fell for Peter's line He was smooth. Paul had seen it happen too many times. Fear gripped his heart as he thought it was about to happen again—tonight—this time to "too nice a girl."

Pensively, Paul tugged at the chair under him and moved closer to the table in the El Zebra club. He passed his hand fondly and carressingly over the beaver jacket on the chair beside him This was Ann—a part of Ann—the delicately perfumed fragrance of the jacket pierced his troubled mind. Baffled and driven, he came to a decision. He resolved, after tonight, to ape and copy his twin brother's every move and loquacious banter. He'd do it and see how far that would get him—for a change.

Paul's eyes searched the dance floor for Peter and Ann. They had danced together for the fourth consecutive time. Thank goodness this was to be the last dance, they had agreed to leave upon its completion.

Thank goodness this was the last dance. Paul feared the worst. He tried to put the fear from his mind.

Ann had said: "You don't mind, do you, Paul?" Of course he did! But he couldn't let Ann know, just then. "This is some brother you have." She smiled into Peter's face as they glided away.

Some brother, is right! Paul thought. Probably laying it on again. Ann seemed to enjoy it. Paul didn't! Ann was his girl!

Ann fitted into Paul's plans for that part of life he desired. A home A charming wife. His heart melted every time he dared to think of it. He hadn't yet found the courage to tell her. Gracious, kind, beautiful Ann. But he had told her all about himself, his early boyhood, he, the younger of twins, he had even told her about Peter. He wasn't afraid of Peter then, with two thousand miles between them. They'd probably be married before Peter would meet her.

Paul was afraid of Peter now. Breezy, garrulous Peter. Back home, Paul had always been referred to as the quiet one, when the twins were the subject of conversation.

The trouble with himself, Paul thought, was that he had always given up too easily to Peter, from childhood up. Peter always did get the best toys, the best bike, the best clothes, the best of everything.

Ann was something Paul wanted more than anything else in his life. She represented the best of everything to him. Determination filled his lean, square-jawed face. He WAS the quiet one, up until tonight. Long live the new Paul!

It would not be easy, Paul reminded himself. Peter had years of experience along these lines. He regarded life about him with hardened indifference, and when Paul sought to reason with him, Peter's face would turn quite blank, his eyes evasive. He never argued, never changed. He'd find love, cultivate it to crop, taste of it, and leave it.

Now, with the thought of losing Ann racing through his nervous system, Paul vowed his scruples were to undergo a change.

Earlier in the evening Peter was in Paul's apartment talking on the phone. "Peter!" Paul said. "What are you doing in New York . . .? How did you get in the apartment?"

"Quiet, young un," Peter had said. He placed his hand over the mouthpiece of the phone. "Can't you see I'm busy?"

"Sorry."

"Say, who's Ann?" Peter whispered.

"ANN!" Paul had almost shouted. "Give me that phone. Quick. Before you wreck my life!"

Yes, Ann knew it was his brother . Peter told her after a few minutes of conversation . . their voices sounded so much alike . . . quite a kidder . she'd like to meet him. Why not bring him along tonight, on their date? . . . it would be nice . . he'd probably be lonesome she had said.

Lonesome? What a thought to associate with Peter. New York would be just an interlude for him.

" the superintendent let me in. You're looking great, Paul. The phone rang so I answered it. All right? Good. Transferred to Massachusetts You'll be seein' more of me now. Great town, Boston. Steeped in tradition. Girls congenial, too Wouldn't exactly compare with the girls in Texas. But all right. Great."

In the apartment Paul wasn't so sure he was doing the right thing taking Peter out on this date, he felt uneasy—remembering Peter's technique. He had executed a feeler: "How about making it stag tonight?"

"Nothing doing," Peter had said. "Besides, you've already made the date "

True, the date was made and Ann did want to meet Peter. Would she be less susceptible to Peter's soft impeachment?

Thank goodness this was the last dance. Paul feared the worst. He tried to put the fear from his mind. They were coming back to the table now, both of them laughing, hand-in-hand. Paul tried to tell himself he was being foolish and torturing the depths of his heart with pain that never really should be there.

The obsession stayed with him as they reached the street and there took on more agitation. Peter said: "Well, I'll leave you two alone now. The night is still young for me. See you later in the apartment, Paul. Good night, Ann "

"Good night, Peter," Ann said. "Call me before you go away."

IS THIS IT? Paul wondered. Is this the beginning to another broken heart? They watched Peter vanish down the dim lit street. He turned at the next corner and waved. In the next instant he was gone and with him a still, hushed silence came over the empty street. The laughter, the gayety, the radiance left Ann's face.

Paul prepared himself bravely for what was to come.

Ann was talking: "Peter is fun."

Fun? Was that how lasting love was defined? Had fun taken the place of love built on solid, deep-rooted admiration? The love, the deepest affection that normally leads to marriage? Peter was not ready for that. Someone was bound to be hurt, cruelly; he'd not allow it to happen to Ann. He turned to her, words of protest rushing to his lips—then suddenly heard her say: " . but of the twins, I like you best, Paul."

Paul glowed. Ann somehow understood—understood that life with Peter, for any girl, would end so—a wave of the hand. His heart beating wildly, there on the walk, Paul took Ann into his arms, held her close and vowed—to be himself for the rest of his life.

Tricks for Teens

FOOLISH NOTIONS

With everything you have to worry about, including what you're going to do this Saturday night—how do you ever have time to dream up these amazing ideas?

TOOTH SAVER—Remember that article in a national magazine about the bad effects of opening your bobby pins with your teeth? Well, one of our Hi-Style scouts reports that she is now opening her bobby pins on a wire which she nailed tautly from one side of a wooden box to the other. She keeps her bobby pins in the box and opens them on the wire as she lifts them out. She says it's much easier to get a new piece of wire than it is to get a new set of teeth. She has something there!

ALL OVER THE MAP—Because so many of you collect pen pals just as you collect photos of Robert Mitchum and telephone calls—you'll be interested in an entirely new system of keeping your correspondence in order Pin up a large map of the United States and stick pins in each city where you have a pen pal. Red topped pins means that your pen pal owes you a letter; black means vice-versa. It's a good reminder and it looks so official!

LIVELY DECORATIONS—Do you want a really different table centerpiece for your next party? Well, fill a bowl with a quart of water, drop in one teaspoon full of citric acid and one teaspoon full of baking soda. Now—drop in 18 moth balls and, within a few moments, the balls will start jumping up and down and will continue to perform for about an hour. When they show signs of tiring, just revive them with another dose of the acid. Let us know how it works

ANKLE TURNS—A trick for your old ballet slippers is to sew ribbon loops at the backs to hold any ribbons or bracelets you might wear as anklets. For evening, try rhinestone or gold ribbons. We've already warned you that the ankle strap shoe is the smartest thing on two feet for summer, haven't we?

BEAUTY AND THE BIB—You wind the chains 'round and 'round your necks to fall in a bib effect over your sweater and blouses. If you're wearing a dickey, just wear the Peter Pan collar over the chain.

FALLOW FIELDS

Grace Noll Crowell

THE field is worn from yielding the good grain.
Fallow it lies, its furrows dark and still.
Beneath the blinding sun and bitter rain
It patiently awaits its master's will.
It draws new power as the year goes by
From winds that sweep across its furrowed way;
It pulls the sunlight from the bending sky,
And holds it there to use again some day.

Now I, like any barren field, must lie
Fallow awhile. God make me wise to wait
As old fields do through storms, nor question why
Strength comes so slowly, peace so very late.
Let me draw power from this time, and then,
Strengthened anew, rise up to serve again.

Sisters Meet For First Time

A London airport was the scene of the meeting of two sisters who had never seen each other before, although both were over thirty years old. When Miss June Morgan, 31, stepped down from the plane arriving from the United States she was greeted by her sister Violet, 34, now Mrs. Clifford Evans of Reading, England, who had been left in Great Britain as a child when her parents went to America, where June was born three years later. Each sister had photographs of the other and they had no difficulty in recognizing each other at the crowded airport.

AROUND THE HOUSE

If your scouring powder comes in cardboard containers which go to pieces before the powder is used up, make your own permanent container by using an empty mayonnaise jar in the top of which you have punched holes. To keep this glass "powder shaker" from slipping out of your wet soapy hands, put some strips of adhesive tape around the sides of the jar.

To avoid steaming up the bathroom when you draw your bath, run cold water first and then add hot water to it until you get the desired mixture. After a shower, turn on the cold water for a few minutes to clear up the steam.

Most common types of shoe polish can be removed with cleaning fluid. Or, on washable whites, let the polish dry and then brush most of it off. After that, wet it and let it dry again so you can brush it again.

In an emergency, when you haven't time to change from your best shoes to your house ones for some last-minute cooking or dish washing, protect the shoes by slipping paper bags over your feet and secure them at the ankles with rubber bands.

When raisins get stale and hard, they can be freshened and used if you put them in a strainer and set the strainer with a cover on it over a pot of boiling water for about 15 minutes.

When you empty a hot-water bottle, blow air into it and then screw the stopper in.

To scrape the bottom of a pot, use a wooden spoon or the sharp end of a wooden clothespin. This minimizes noise as well as damage to the pot.

The gummy residue left by adhesive tape on your skin or on any other surface is easily removed with nail polish remover or cleaning fluid.

MISS MARY FREEMAN IS BRIDE OF DONALD A. SCHAEFER

Ceremony Took Place At The First Congregational Church At McGregor

The setting of the wedding of Miss Mary E. Freeman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Freeman of McGregor, and Donald A. Schaefer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Emery Schaefer of Forest City, was formed by lighted candelabra and baskets of mixed garden flowers. The wedding was held in the First Congregational Church at McGregor with the Rev. William Richards (Philosophy and Religion instructor at Upper Iowa University at Fayette), officiating at the double ring ceremony.

The maid of honor was Miss Charlotte Freeman of McGregor, sister of the bride. The best man was Edward Buntenbach Jr of Klemme, lifelong friend of the groom. Ushers at the wedding were Keith Stott of Titonka, friend of the bride and groom and Elwyn Schaefer of Forest City, brother of the groom.

The bride, who was given in

marriage by her father, wore a white satin gown with a net yoke, long sleeves pointed at the wrists and a full covert train. Her fingertip veil fell from a tierra of seed pearls and she wore a single strand of pearls about her neck. She carried an arm bouquet of red roses with white ribbon streamers.

The maid of honor wore a pink formal with shoulder length veil and a crown of astors and carried a bouquet of pink and white astors.

The bride's mother wore an aqua street length dress with white accessories and a corsage of pink roses, and the groom's mother fore a dark green street length dress with brown accessories and a corsage of red roses.

The bridegroom wore a gray chalk strip suit and the best man wore a dark blue suit.

Mrs. Frank Sloan of McGregor, played the traditional wedding marches and "Because," "Always" and "I Love You Truly".

Following the ceremony a reception was held in the church parlors which was decorated with lighted candles and bowls of sweet peas. The bridal table was centered with a three tiered cake, topped with a miniature bridal couple and surrounded by pink rose buds.

Miss Joy Hanson, cousin of the groom, wore a light pink formal and took care of the guest book.

Hostesses were Mrs. Fred Bachtell, Mrs. Clarence Ferguson and Mrs. Fred Widmen. Three girl friends of the bride, Roberta Brooks, June Bacon and Faye Ferguson served at the reception.

The bride was graduated from McGregor high school in 1946 and Upper Iowa University (2 year teachers course) in 1948. She will teach Kindergarten in Postville this fall.

The groom is a graduate of Klemme High School, attended South Dakota State College, served in the U. S. Army for 2 years, and is at present a senior at Upper Iowa. He will attend school this year and plans to be graduated with a B. S. degree in the spring of 1949.

After a short wedding trip to Clear Lake the couple will return to Postville where Mrs. Schaefer will teach. About September 13th the groom will resume school at Fayette.

Out of town guests visiting included relatives from Forest City, Kanawha, Rockford, Nora Springs, Clear Lake, Klemme, Colorado Springs, Colo.; Watertown, Wisc.; and Hanover, Ill.

GIBBS FAMILY OF HAWAII VISIT IN IOWA

Anna Gibbs has received word of the safe arrival home of the Frank Gibbs family of Honolulu, Hawaii after having spent a delightful two months with relatives in Iowa. Enroute to their home they stopped at Denver, Estes Park, Zion National Park, Boulder Dam and Yosemite National Park. At San Francisco they boarded a plane on August 14 at 10 p. m. and were in Honolulu the next morning.

The Harl Gimer family of Renwick accompanied them as far as Salt Lake City, Utah.

Miss Bredbenner Attends Reunion Of Teachers

Miss Novella Bredbenner returned home last Wednesday after attending a week end reunion of former Allison, Iowa teachers. The reunion was held at a cabin on McGregor Heights overlooking the Mississippi River. From McGregor Miss Bredbenner accompanied friends to Cedar Falls, Iowa and spent several days visiting on the I S. T. C. campus.

RETURNED HOME FROM TRIP TO THE EAST

Mr. and Mrs. Bruce H. Peck of near Klemme, returned on Wednesday from a two week 5,000 mile trip in the east. They visited in Pennsylvania at his old home at Blain, and visited the graves of his parents, and places where Mr. Peck used to live when he was a boy. They also visited his aunt at Mifflintown, and an uncle at Lewistown; his brother Lester at Harrisburg. Lester worked for Bruce 25 years ago when Bruce lived on the farm known as "the island" at Stilson. They also visited cousins in and around Harrisburg. They then went on to New York City, the Bronx, Mt. Vernon, then to the Niagra Falls, then home. They drove through acres of grapes, pears, and peach orchards all along the way, the crops were good. Roads were perfect in the mountains, all blacktop or pavement roads.

On the way home they stopped at Mt. Morris, Ill. and visited and old friend of Mrs. Pecks, Elias Long and daughter, Lola. Mr. Long said he was 91 years young and was feeling pretty spry. It is the first time in 34 years Bruce has been back to his home in Pennsylvania and the first time for Mrs. Peck also.

Much scenery was enjoyed along the way, with the mountains, rivers, crops, orchards, and a lot of building going on, also driving over the turnpike, and through the mountain tunnels.

Return Home After 3,200 Mile Western Trip

Mr. and Mrs Gerald Burk and sons Kay and Dean returned Sunday night from a 3,200 mile trip which took them to the Bad Lands and Black Hills of South Dakota. They drove on to Billings, Montana, where they visited her sister, Mrs. Raphael Kernan and family and were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Kernan and daughters on a trip through the Yellowstone Park. They came home by way of North Dakota, and Brainard, Minnesota.

The State 4-H Convention at Ames was reported on by our delegate, Roger Halfpop, when the Avery and Twin Lake Hustlers Club met at the home of Melvin James on Monday, Aug 16. Plans for the Achievement show to be held at Garner on August 23 and 24 were discussed. Herb Allen, County youth, assistant. gave a demonstration on splicing rope. After the meeting we had a weiner roast "Hobo" style. One guest was present. The next meeting will be at the Carpenter home on September 13.

Miss Stella Hollatz Weds Byrnes Lemke, Klemme

Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Stella Hollatz. daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Hollatz of Clear Lake, to Byrnes H. Lemke of Klemme, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Lemke. of Garner, performed at St. John's Lutheran Church, northeast of Garner, by the Rev. L. W. Heideman who read the double ring ceremony.

Mrs. William Boehnke played nuptial music and accompanied Wilbur Hollatz, brother of the bride, who sang.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and had her sister, Miss Ardith Hollatz, as maid of honor. The bridesmaids, also sisters of the bride, were the Misses Helen and Ethel Hollotz and the flowergirl was Sandra Kaye Perkins.

W. M. Lemke, brother of the bridegroom, was bestman and Milvern Schoenwetter, Ellsworth Hollatz, Darrel De Groote and Eugene Schaefer were the ushers.

Following the ceremony a reception for 150 guests was held in the church parlors. After a wedding trip the couple will be at home in Klemme, where they are building a home.

MRS. BYRNES LEMKE

The bride is a graduate of Ventura high school and was employed at the Clear Lake Bank and Trust Company. The bridegroom has served several years in the navy. He is employed by Stub's Surge Service of Klemme.

OBITUARY OF IDA WILHELMINA LARSON

Ida Wilkelmina Larson, daughter of Charles and Betsy Johnson was born March 17,1887 at Alta, Iowa.

The early years of her life were spent in the Alta Community. She was baptized on May 9, 1887 by Pastor Kehmstrom and confirmed on November 11, 1900 by Pastor Lindell and became a member of the Trinity Lutheran Church. She worked several years in a store at Alta. On January 29, 1908. Ida W. Johnson and August Larson were married at the home of the brides parents in Alta, Iowa.

They commenced housekeeping on a farm near Alta and after two years they purchased a farm near Bancroft, Iowa where they farmed for 27 years. From 1936 to 1946 they farmed their farm ½ miles west of Klemme and for the past two years they lived in retirement at Forest City.

Mrs. Larson was not in good health for the past few years. For the past 5 to 6 years she endured considerable suffering, but she seldom complained and always tried to be helpful to all her friends and near ones. She bore her suffering bravely, reavealing a firm foundation in her saviour. Her devoted husband gave her the best of care. She was beloved by her grandchildren. Her favorite Bible passage was the 23rd Psalm.

On Tuesday evening, August 17, 1948 mother Larson became very tired and fell asleep. But it pleased her heavenly father to take her to a home not built by hands but by him that said I go to prepare a place for you that where I am you may be also. Having reached the age of 61 years and 5 months.

She leaves to mourn her passing her husband, August Larson, two sons Carold and Alvin, Klemme, Ia.; one daughter, Bernice Branstad, Menahaga, Minn. and seven grandsons and three granddaughters. Three brothers: A. J. Johnson, Carl Johnson and Ben Johnson; two sisters, Mrs. Geo. Erickson, Mrs. V. O. Johnson all of Alta and other more distant relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held on Friday, August 20, 1948 at 10:00 a. m. at the Hanson Funeral Home at Forest City, Iowa with Rev. Ruben Grosshuesch of Melbourne in charge at 2.30 p. m. at Trinity Lutheran church at Alta with Rev. C. T. Holmberg in charge. Burial was at the Scandinavian Cemetery in Alta, Iowa.

Pall Bearers were Semon Stieff, Peat Thompson, Edward Schultz, Ole Allison, Kenneth Kluckhohn, Fred Kluckhohn, Bertel Beck and Marlowe Johnson.

WON STATE FAIR TRIP

The Avery Sunbeams with their "Stop, Spot, and Go Stain" demonstration given by Joan Lowenberg and Harriet Ostendorf, under the direction of Mrs. Roy Arnold, won a trip to the State Fair Tuesday at the Achievement Show in Garner.

Gloria Haefner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Haefner, who represented the Senior Group, won on "Good Grooming" and will win a trip to the State Fair at Des Moines. Congratulations, Girls.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Moscow Talks Provide Peace Hope; Congress Eyes Inflation, Housing; Red Spy Scare Startles Country

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

MOSCOW:
Conference

Practically all that anyone knew during the initial stages of the Moscow conference between Josef Stalin and the ambassadors of three western nations was that there was a conference.

The opacity of a thick censorship ban overlaid any details of what was happening.

Nevertheless, the impression was that the talks, fathered by the desperation inherent in the Berlin crisis, might be the first step in easing off the strain between Russia and the western powers.

Some information that slipped through the secrecy wall indicated that both sides might be willing to make some concessions in order to further negotiations between Russia and the U. S., Great Britain and France.

The talks with Stalin and Molotov were reported to have produced at least one new suggestion—that prior to another Big Four conference there should be a meeting of the U. S., Russian, British and French deputy foreign ministers.

Such a conference would, theoretically, be accompanied by a gradual relaxation of the restrictions which the Soviets have clamped on the western areas of Berlin and which brought the East-West relations to their present boiling point.

Although it might be the height of optimism, Communist Russia being what it is, there was some faint hope that such a piecemeal lifting of the Berlin blockade might bring about a provisional meeting of minds on the subject of German currency and other irritating issues.

At the worst, such a discussion at least would tend to act as a brake against a drift to war and provide a breathing space for talks with Moscow on more basic controversies.

There was, however, still another interpretation of the discussions between Stalin and the three western ambassadors: Russia, having carried its Berlin blockade virtually to the ultimate point short of war, might be thinking that it had brought the western powers to a position where they would have to accede to Soviet demands if they wished to avoid conflict.

CONGRESS:
Unwilling

Probably the only accomplishment of the special summer session of congress called by President Truman was to provide both parties with a bigger and better supply of political ammunition for the election campaign.

Democrats would be able to say that the GOP congress simply sat back on its haunches and did nothing about the pressing problems of inflation, housing and other national issues.

Republicans could counter with the assertion that, within the bounds of their political beliefs and judgment of what is best for the nation, they did all they could under the circumstances. To that they probably would add the stock argument that the whole thing is the fault of the 16-year Democratic regime and that the ultimate solution must lie in the election of a Republican administration this November.

One result of the special session that might be classed as favorable was that it served to sharpen the rough edges of the wide cleavage between the two parties over domestic problems and give the voters a more clear-cut, definitive idea of what they will be deciding on November 2.

Despite President Truman's laborious diatribes against congress and his repeated warnings that controls alone will curb the now dangerous inflation, in the final analysis it remained foolish to believe that the GOP congress ever would take the action he recommended. Republicans simply do not approve of that method of handling the nation's economy.

Republican congressmen agreed only to string along with legislation serving to reimpose consumer credit controls, with some limitation on bank credits, and to speed action on a watered-down housing program which does little except ease credit terms for home builders.

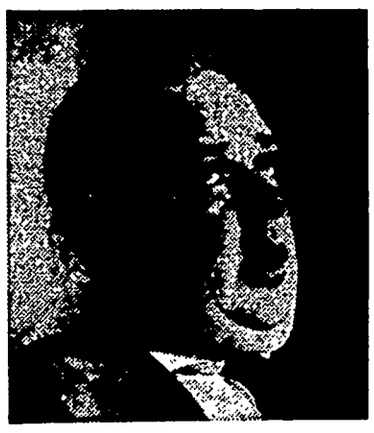
The anti-poll tax measure, blocked for a week by a droning filibuster by southern Democrats, finally withered and blew away in dust.

TAXATION:
125 Billion

By the end of this year individual taxpayers in the U. S. will have paid nearly 125 billion dollars in direct personal taxes, according to a survey entitled "Domestic Consumer Markets" prepared by the National Industrial Conference board.

Last year, the report says, Americans paid more in personal taxes than they spent for new homes, cars, furniture and medical care.

'Then There Was . . .'



Whittaker Chambers, a senior editor of Time magazine and an admitted former member of the Communist party, got a load off his chest when he told the house un-American activities committee the names of a few more higher echelon government officials who had participated in the notorious Washington spy ring of a decade ago. His testimony included the names of Alger Hiss, former state department official; Nathan Witt, former attorney for NLRB, and Lee Pressman, former CIO general counsel.

ESPIONAGE:
Dragon Seed

The dragon seeds of international espionage sown during the war suddenly had begun to bloom with a vengeance and the nation's capital seemed to be overgrown with spies and rumors of spies.

First stone was cast by Miss Elizabeth Bentley, self-confessed courier for Soviet agents, who revealed that much of her information had come from sources in official government positions.

She showed no hesitancy in naming names, among which were those of Nathan G. Silvermaster, board of economic warfare and war assets administration official; William W. Remington, former commerce department official, and Alger Hiss, former state department official active in the establishment of the United Nations.

There was no visible proof that any of the persons she implicated ever had furnished information to the Soviet espionage ring, although some had Communistic backgrounds. As a matter of fact, the FBI reported that it had spent more than three million dollars in an investigation of the same matter months prior to the current excitement. The G-men finally gave it up because of lack of documentary proof.

But congressional investigations were under way in both the senate and house. Testimony included the usual flamboyant accusations and recriminations but failed to produce any concrete evidence.

Rep. Karl Mundt (Rep., S. D.), chairman of the house un-American activities committee, added to the national impact of the affair by asserting that there is "good reason to believe a Communist spy ring is operating in Washington right now."

His committee was investigating, he said, although the public hearings so far had dealt only with the testimony that a Red espionage system was at work in the U. S. during the war.

COTTON:
Mechanized

Last of the great American farm commodities to remain essentially a man-mule crop, cotton finally is becoming mechanized, thus eliminating the necessity of maintaining vast armies of laborers to meet the two peak labor periods of the crop cycle.

Mechanization is one of the major steps in the effort of cotton people from Virginia to California to achieve lower production costs. To the 12½ million people in 18 states who derive all or a substantial part of their income from cotton it is of paramount importance that they keep their crop competitive cost-wise.

The answer lies, to a great extent, in mechanization. Thinning and weeding equipment and harvesting machines are revamping the farm picture in the South.

The mechanical cotton picker is capable of performing the work of 40 to 50 human pickers, varying with weather conditions, land surface, and other factors.

Typical result of mechanization was the experience of a Mississippi farmer who used a flame cultivator to control weeds at a cost of 50 cents an acre at the same time human choppers were costing $5.

Of course, complete mechanization of cotton will not materialize overnight. National Cotton council, representing the entire industry, reports that in 1947 less than 3 per cent of the crop could be classed as entirely mechanized. A considerable portion of the remaining crop, however, was in various stages of mechanization.

RELIGION

World Council

"To justify the ways of God to man" was John Milton's expressed purpose for writing his monolithic epic poem of the Reformation, "Paradise Lost."

Academically Milton succeeded in providing that justification for his own and an unknowable number of future generations of Christians. But since the 16th century days of Milton human society has turned an increasingly cold cheek to the spiritual values preached by every great Christian since Paul.

Particularly since the outset of the 20th century man's attention has been claimed more and more by the dramatic power of materialism which has been brought into full play as a result of this technological economy with its assembly lines, power politics and repetitive wars.

Thus, the problem now is not so much how to justify God's ways to man as it is how to justify man's society in the eyes of God. And if, as many churchmen believe, no such justification is possible, then how to work a reasonable and beneficial change in the society which men have wrought.

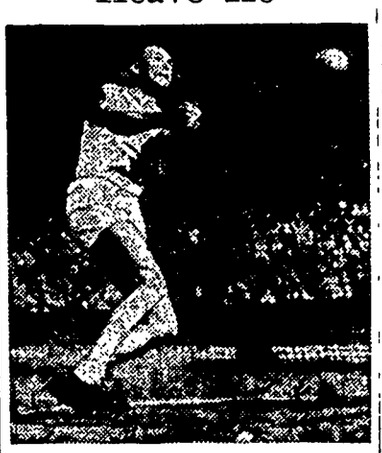
It is that problem which the World Council of Churches, composed of 148 Protestant and Orthodox churches from 40 nations, will endeavor to meet squarely at its first world assembly in Amsterdam August 22 to September 4.

Four hundred and fifty church leaders — laymen and clergymen alike — are determined, among other things, "to assess the strengths and weaknesses of present-day Christendom" and "to define a basis of common principle upon which Christians can cooperate for world order."

Under the conference theme, "Man's Disorder and God's Design," the delegates will attack such questions as: How to infuse more spirituality into our mechanized society without advocating the destruction of all mechanization? What action can the church take among its members to aid in establishment of world order and what is the church's answer to the amoral power politics of the present day?

If these are tough questions, the World Council of Churches is likely to prove itself spiritually tough and realistic enough to go a long way toward providing some of the answers.

Heave Ho



Despite the impression you might have received from reading newspaper accounts of the Olympics, American athletes were not the only ones who took part in the games. This straining gentleman, for instance, is Imry Nemeth of Hungary who won the hammer throw with a heave of 183 feet, 11½ inches.

HOLY LAND:
Optimism

Although the July 18 truce in Palestine put at least a temporary end to the military bloodshed between Jews and Arabs, the struggle for rights and power continues behind the diplomatic scenes in the Near East.

However, there is some reason to believe now that many of the troubles in the troubled spot may be smoothed out when Count Folke Bernadotte, U. N. mediator, proposes his next peace plan in September.

One of the reasons for such optimism is the attitude of King Abdullah of Trans-Jordan, most powerful of the Arab league states.

Abdullah has asked for full and careful consideration of any future proposal for permanent peace in Palestine.

And, he said, his "Arab nation does not exclude any possible compromise that secures justice and prevents unnecessary bloodshed.

"We would like that the efforts of Count Bernadotte in the refugee problem be successful, and afterwards that any new proposals which he will make should not be rejected outright, but be fully discussed before they are put in final form."

That Old Oil

Oil is being consumed in the U. S. today at a rate exceeding the total world consumption of only 10 years ago, according to an article in a recent issue of "Business Comment," bulletin of the Northern Trust company in Chicago.

Demand for all oils in the first quarter of 1948 averaged 6.3 million barrels daily, an increase of 7 per cent over the corresponding period of 1947.

Czech Refugee Confirms Crack in Iron Curtain

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Is the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics cracking? That's an idea which is being toyed with by some wishful thinkers in Washington while others consider it one of the most dangerous playthings that ever got into the hands of unwary diplomats.

In any case, the theory is worth examining. It appears to have been encouraged by some members of the little group of highly intelligent but also highly prejudiced people who form a constantly growing segment of Washington society—the political refugees from the countries on the Soviet borders. One can, however, trust this group for certain basic facts.

Recently, I learned one of these facts which may surprise you. Of course, you recall that Soviet diplomacy always has explained what we call its aggression as simply a desire to surround itself with what it describes as "friendly" countries. The refugees of whom I spoke are living proof that not all of the inhabitants of Russia's satellites are friendly. However, most of us have been led to assume that at least the governments and the controlling Communist minorities which support them have been able to produce a degree of mutual affection which satisfies the Kremlin. After Tito's action we wondered.

BAUKHAGE

What about the frontiers between these countries and Russia?

The answer came from an anti-Communist, recently arrived from Czechoslovakia—one of the many persons who are seeping out of that and other satellite countries every day. He was asked in my presence if the frontier between his country and Russia was open, in the sense that travel was permitted under the same conditions that obtain between normally friendly nations.

The Czech laughed. He said: "The border between my country and Russia is no tighter than a dam would have to be to keep a drop of water from getting through."

I have heard the Russian frontiers of other satellite nations similarly described.

My informant also outlined other significant conditions in Czechoslovakia, first reminding us of three important facts:

1. Czechoslovakia is the most industrialized of all the satellites.

2. It is also the most democratic in the realistic sense we view democracy. In other words the country is thoroughly indoctrinated with the kind of democratic methods we know. This is due in part, of course, to the fact that so many of the men responsible for formation of the Czech republic spent many years in the United States and were made thoroughly familiar with American methods. It is also due to the fact that they had a long period of practical experience in putting these methods into effect in their own country.

3. The Czechs had a very high standard of living compared to the other satellites.

These factors, taken together, made the Czechs particularly vulnerable to a Communist coup. When it came, because of their democratic training and high standard of living, the Czechs were particularly unhappy as an aftermath of Communist methods and Russian domination. In other words, the Czechs had more to lose than any of the other countries within the Red orbit.

Greater Problems Are in Prospect

Czechoslovakia is not yet thoroughly communized. There is still a certain amount of open criticism. There have been no wholesale purges. Undoubtedly, these will come, but when they do—and herein those who believe that the Soviet position is weakening are encouraged—the prospects are that the harder the Russians crack down, the greater problem Czechoslovakia will present to her Kremlin overseers.

Before the coup that ended in the death of Masaryk took place, it was estimated that perhaps 20 per cent of the people had been indoctrinated with communism. Another 10 per cent were sympathetic, chiefly from a theoretical point of view. My Czech informant declares that it can be reliably estimated that the taste of practical communism which the people have had now has reduced that communist score to 15 per cent.

He also confirmed the recent statements about the army—though he gave no figures—made by Gen. Antonin Hasal who escaped to the American zone of Germany in the middle of July. Hasal said that 70 per cent of the enlisted men and non-commissioned officers in the Czech army was anti-Communist.

My informant put it this way: "The air force, many of whose members fought with the R. A. F., is almost entirely pro-Western. If the Reds hadn't drained the tanks of all the planes before the coup, most of them would have flown away." Many did anyway and Czech planes are turning up continually in Western controlled areas of Europe. This occurs in civil aviation too because many of the pilots are former members of the air corps.

But if the Red government cannot trust the air corps, it has even less confidence in the Czech armored force. It has been necessary to immobilize it.

But the greatest friction caused by partial communization is felt in the nation's economy. Everyone suffers, at least indirectly, because of this, but it can be seen most clearly among workers. Recent figures, which were made available to the public, indicate that there is a sharp falling-off in the man-hour productiveness. This could be attributed either to conscious sabotage or to a feeling of indifference and resentment caused by reduced pay and restrictions on the union labor movement.

Before the Russians moved in, 75 to 80 per cent of Czechoslovakia's foreign trade was with non-Communist countries. This has been considerably reduced under pressure from Russia, but even now some 60 to 70 per cent of her exports go to Western Europe.

Virtually the entire output of the great Skoda arms factory goes to Russia. The output is largely heavy artillery. Production of small arms for Russia also has been stepped up greatly.

Chance of Revolt Termed Small

Objective observers admit that there is small chance of an open revolt. That isn't the Czech method. They are great underground workers, but they haven't the enthusiasm for blood-letting that people like the Yugoslavs have. If, however, the Soviets became involved in war, undoubtedly the Czechs would join heartily with those they consider their liberators.

Those persons who predict a crack in the iron curtain base part of their argument an on attitude among Czech leaders which is said to parallel that of Tito's supporters in Yugoslavia. That is this question of nationalism. There have been recent reports from Europe that Czech Premier Gottwald, who always has been considered Moscow's right-hand-man in Czechoslovakia, is about to fall from Soviet grace for the same reason Tito fell.

Gottwald is a lifelong Communist who was won over to the Marxian philosophy before he had an opportunity to see it put into effect in his own country. He was an apt and willing student in Moscow, but he apparently cherished the illusion that his own country could accept the communist form of government and still maintain its identity and its independence. The utter domination by Russia has become not only distasteful to Gottwald but also to at least two other members of his cabinet, including the minister of justice.

Gottwald is not the leader that Tito is and he probably can be brushed aside. But the viewpoint he has come to represent is pointed out as one of the weaknesses of the Russian system.

There is one other fact which cannot be hidden from the eyes of any careful observer with some military knowledge of Czechoslovakia. That is that the military preparations in the country which the Russians have carried out are almost 100 per cent defensive. Apparently, the Russian fear of invasion from the West is greater than their desire or ability to prepare for offensive warfare.

As proof of this, my informant told me that although one of the scarcest consumer products in Czechoslovakia is paper, two of the biggest mills manufacturing it were limiting their output to blackout paper only.

These are some of the reasons back of the theory which the people who believe in the old military axiom that you mustn't underestimate the enemy say is dangerous.

By GRANTLAND RICE

IS THERE a limit to speed for a man or a horse? Can the human or the equine frame carry just so much drive before it starts to crack? We put this query to Hirsch Jacobs, one of the finest conditioners in any sport, one of the best horse trainers of any given decade.

"To set a record," Jacobs said, "one must have a fast track. That means a hard track. Setting records on a fast track is dangerous. It has wrecked many fine horses. I would say there is a limit to how fast a horse can run before he cracks up. Especially if he is after records over a hard, fast track."

Grantland Rice

This reminded me of a story that Charley Paddock once told.

"Just at the time," the World's Fastest Human said, "I was at my peak. I had just tied the world's record at 9 3/5. I knew I could do better. I was set that day at Los Angeles in a Southern California meet. I broke in front. I was flying at the 50.

"Around the 80-yard mark I knew I was headed for at least a 9.1 for the 100 yards. I knew the record was mine. Then the calves of both legs began to shiver. I felt all my leg muscles pulling apart. The thought suddenly hit me that I was on my way to being a cripple. I felt my legs were breaking up over this hard, fast track. I pulled up—and still finished in 9 3/5.

"I couldn't run again for weeks. The calves of both legs were extremely sore and strained." And don't forget that Paddock had two of the strongest looking legs anyone ever saw on a track star.

Limit on Speed

"I realized then," Paddock told me, "that as we are developed today, we are capable of handling only so much speed. I mean our muscles and our ligaments. In the course of evolution and development someone will run the 100 yards in 9 flat. But not now."

This was proved when Mel Patton ran 100 yards in 9.3 and wound up later with cramps. Patton was moving into the danger zone, due entirely to excessive speed over a hard, fast track. He was finding out what Paddock had discovered years before.

"How does this sound?" I asked Jacobs. "It sounds 100 per cent sensible," Jacobs said. "You can't drive either horses or humans over fast, hard tracks into records without paying the penalty. Which is a breakdown. What do the owners want—a record or a sound horse?

Jacobs claimed Stymie for something like $1,500 and turned him into a million-dollar probability.

The racing game is packed with fine trainers. We could start with Ben and Jimmy Jones. We could bring you Maxie Hirsch, certainly one of the greatest.

We could call on Sunny Jim Fitzsimmons who knows horses better than horses know themselves. A great trainer. There is Honest John Partridge, who has been a fine trainer for 50 years. Most of these are veterans Ben Jones, Fitzsimmons, Hirsch, John Partridge—able, smart, can take you back more years than you can remember.

Young Trainers Are Good

There are any number of younger trainers on the job—Johnny Gaver of Greentree; S. E. Veitch of C. V. Whitney, one of the best, and several more. But I also like the training methods of Jacobs, who wins his share of races without any $50,000 or $60,000 investments in young talent.

Jacobs is a condition man. Condition to me means so much more than anything else. A champion must have many things. But above all he must have condition. Joe Louis had little condition in either his first or second Joe Walcott fight. Walcott kept in condition. But he was a second-rate fighter.

As a result, Louis, rated one of the best of all the heavyweights, was far behind Walcott after 25 consecutive rounds.

When Louis' legs began to put on weight you knew what happened. He was far over the top.

"Condition," Jacobs tells me, "isn't a matter of pigeons, horses or human beings. I've trained pigeons and horses. Human beings would be just the same."

"What are the main qualities?" I asked.

"Too many things," Jacobs said. "The amount of work they need. Food. Rest. I'll take up horses. You watch a horse. You watch the way he runs. He may be overworked. He may need more work. These are the things to look for.

"No one is ever quite alike." Jacobs said. "I mean a human being, pigeon or horse. Each case must be accorded individual attention."

E PERRY LANDED IN 1853 . . . Things are going so well in Japan that the United States is official homage to the spot where Commodore Perry landed 95 years ago. A mass celebration ld at Kurihama, site of the historic landing in 1853. The ceremonies in which high ranking U. S. and officers participated were held to commemorate the date of Perry's entry into Japan. Part of the inscribed in Japanese on the monument. It was a truly momentous landing, opening Japan as commerce with the western world and, of course, for other less pleasant events.

A GIRL SCOUT SERENADE . . . Arriving from Brazil to attend the world conference of Girl and Girl Scouts at Cooperstown, N. Y., August 13-23, four Brazilian Girl Scouts twang out a American serenade on their guitars for the benefit of a reception committee of United States Girl who greeted them at LaGuardia field. The good neighbors are: (kneeling) Teresa Machado and Fernandes, (standing) Dea Fernandes and Haydee Fernandes. Standing at the left are two of the can scouts: Susan Brady of Woodside troop 4146 and Grace Haas of Springfield Gardens troop 4392.

OROUS SIDE OF THE OLYMPICS . . . With American athletes running, jumping, pole vaulting swimming away with almost every gold medal in sight in the 1948 Olympic games, press photographers kept so busy recording these events that they hardly had time to take pictures of some of the finer nts of the big sports show. Well, hardly. One of them ran across some of the U. S. girl gymnasts a practice session and he let his aesthetic sense run away with him. This picture was the result. ing on the fence rail are (left to right) Anita Simonis of New York, Helen Schifano of Newark, and Meta Elste.

Simplicity Is Keynote When Guests Arrive For Unexpected Visit

"HAVE YOU ANY SUGGESTIONS for serving an entire meal when visiting relatives or friends who are vacationing drop in on you unexpectedly?" asks a friend of mine.

You know, this can create quite a problem because this is the season people are liable to be dropping in. Frequently it is mealtime before they leave and many women find themselves up against a problem of providing food for several more than they originally planned, and still making this attractive and good to eat.

The best solution to this is a well stocked pantry shelf. Have on this a number of canned meats, as well as fish and boned chicken or turkey. Keep it provided with several vegetables that are favorites.

Don't forget that spaghetti and baked beans in cans can be dressed up beautifully when you have to entertain on the spot. And then too there are prepared puddings and canned fruits. The latter can be turned into mouth-watering salad platters and the former into pies, tarts or tasty puddings.

Not much chicken is needed to make this delicious loaf when the meat is combined with bread crumbs and seasoning. Creamed green peas are a delightful accompaniment to the main dish.

YOU CAN USE the luncheon ham or canned ham for this dish, which is pretty as well as delicious:

Grilled Ham and Asparagus
(Serves 6)

- 6 slices toast
- 6 slices boiled or canned ham
- 1 1/2 cups milk
- 3 tablespoons butter
- 1 can asparagus
- 1/4 pound grated American cheese
- 3 tablespoons flour
- 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
- 1/2 teaspoon salt

Wrap two or three stalks of asparagus in each slice of ham and fasten with toothpick. Place on a broiler rack for five minutes. Melt butter, blend in flour, milk and seasonings. Cook until smooth and thick, then add cheese. Place grilled ham on toast. Cover with cheese sauce and garnish with tomato slices and parsley.

A GOOD DESSERT to serve with the above dish is simply made:

Coconut Banana Snow
(Serves 6)

- 3 bananas, cut in small pieces
- 2 teaspoons lemon juice
- 1/2 cup cream, whipped
- 1 egg white, stiffly beaten
- 1/2 cup powdered sugar
- 1/2 can coconut

Combine bananas, sugar and lemon juice. Chill. Force through sieve. Fold fruit into egg white, then mix in lightly the whipped cream and coconut. Top with additional cream, coconut and maraschino cherry if desired.

HERE ARE SOME quick things to do with a can of baked beans when you have unexpected guests walking in:

1. Mix one can of baked beans with one-fourth cup chili sauce, one-fourth cup of brown sugar and heat in a casserole.

2. Mix one can of baked beans with two tablespoons chili sauce, two tablespoons each of chopped green pepper, minced onion and celery and heat through.

3. Season one can of baked beans with three tablespoons catsup, two tablespoons brown sugar, and then fold in one can of sliced Vienna sausages.

Baked beans are excellent served as an accompaniment with cold meats, cole slaw or grilled sandwiches.

NOW HERE'S a trick to use with canned chicken to make a good supper or luncheon dish for unexpected guests:

Chicken Loaf
(Serves 6-8)

- 2 cups cooked or canned chopped chicken
- 1/2 cup cooked chopped carrots
- 1 1/4 cups soft bread crumbs
- 2 tablespoons minced onion
- 1 tablespoon minced parsley
- 2 tablespoons minced celery
- 1 1/2 teaspoons salt
- 3/4 cup milk
- 2 eggs
- Parsley for garnish

Mix together all ingredients and pack into a well greased, one quart, heat-resistant glass loaf pan. Bake in a moderate (325 degree) oven for 40 to 45 minutes or until firm and slightly browned. Turn chicken loaf onto platter, garnish with parsley and serve with creamed peas.

IF THE DAY is warm, you might like to prepare some substantial main dish salads to serve as the main course of the meal. Here are two which will appeal to men and women as well as the youngsters:

Hot Frankfurter Salad Bowl
(Serves 4)

- 4 frankfurters
- 4 cups thinly sliced raw potatoes
- 2 1/2 tablespoons minced onion
- 2 1/2 tablespoons minced parsley
- 1/3 cup cooked leftover vegetables
- 1/3 cup well-seasoned French dressing
- 1/2 teaspoon celery seeds
- Salt and pepper

Simmer frankfurters in boiling water for five minutes. Remove, cut into quarters lengthwise, then crosswise into one-inch pieces. Cook potatoes in boiling salted water for about 10 minutes. Drain, toss lightly with frankfurters and remaining ingredients, adding salt and pepper to taste. Serve hot.

Frankfurter-Macaroni Salad
(Serves 4)

- 3/4 cup raw macaroni
- 4 cups boiling water
- 4 frankfurters
- 1/4 cup French dressing
- 2 tablespoons minced onion
- 1/2 cup diced cucumber
- 1 tablespoon slivered green pepper
- 1 cup coarsely diced tomato
- 1/4 cup salad dressing
- 1/2 head lettuce shredded

Cook macaroni in boiling, salted water until tender. Five minutes before macaroni is done, add frankfurters. Then drain. Remove frankfurters and rinse macaroni. Place in a bowl with frankfurters, cut in halves, then lengthwise and crosswise, then add remaining ingredients. Chill before serving.

Here's How to Serve Leftover Eggs, Poultry

Cold mashed potatoes are delicious when the potato is mixed with egg yolk, butter, salt and pepper, and then deep fat fried.

Egg yolks may be mixed with milk and cheese for rarebit. This is served on hot toast after it has cooked until thickened.

Egg yolks may be beaten with whole eggs and used for scrambled eggs, egg nogs or custard.

Egg yolks may be poached by themselves (without whites), then forced through a sieve and used as garnish for salads, canapes, spinach, creamed fish or thick cream soups.

Chicken may be minced fine and mixed with cream sauce, egg yolks and bread crumbs, then fried until crisply browned for a delicious main dish.

Any white sauce may be made more colorful and nourishing by beating in leftover egg yolks

Seek Big Noise To Scare Fish

The United States fish and wildlife service wants to find a noise which will scare young salmon away from the huge spillways and turbines that have been built in the Columbia river.

For years salmon have used the river as they come from the seas to seek fresh water for egg-laying. The old-timers among salmon have sense enough to use the fish ladders and elevators. But young fish, born above the dam, try to come down the hard way, through spillways and turbines. Thousands are killed. If a noise can be discovered which will scare the young salmon in the right direction, a lot of fish lives will be saved.

NOTICE OF A PROPOSED RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY

TO ALL INTERESTED PROPERTY OWNERS:

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Town Council of the Town of Klemme, Iowa at a meeting held on the 9th day of August, 1948, proposed and placed on file a Resolution of Necessity whereby it was deemed necessary and advisable for proper sanitary regulations and for the preservation of the public health of the inhabitants of said town, to build, construct and put in place lines of storm sewer in said town, as follows:

1. An 8 inch storm sewer commencing near the West line of Third Street, and thence running East along a line approximately 20 feet South of and parallel to the center line of Main Street to the County road running south-north on the East Section line, Section 31, T95N, R23W; including 6 laterals to connect in storm intakes, all on Main Street.

2. An 8 inch storm sewer commencing near the West line of Third Street, and thence running West along a line approximately 23 feet South of and parallel to the center line of Main Street to approximately the East line of Second Street; including one manhole and one lateral to connect in storm intakes, all on Main Street.

Said sewers to be provided with all necessary manholes, lampholes, flushtanks, and other appurtenances as may be necessary.

Said sewers to be constructed in strict accordance with the plans and specifications therefor prepared by Rowat & Murray, Engineers, and which are now on file in the office of the Town Clerk, having been duly approved by this council and by the State Board of Health.

YOU ARE FURTHER HEREBY NOTIFIED that it is proposed to pay the cost of said improvements by a special assessment or assessments against abutting or adjacent property as provided by statute and in accordance with the plat and schedule now on file in the office of the Town Clerk of the Town of Klemme, Iowa.

YOU ARE FURTHER HEREBY NOTIFIED that the Town Council of Klemme, Iowa will meet on the 13th day of September, 1948 at 7:30 P. M. in the Council Chambers in said Town of Klemme, Iowa, for the purpose of considering said Resolution at which time said Resolution may be amended and adopted or adopted as proposed.

YOU ARE FURTHER HEREBY NOTIFIED that any person affected by said proposed improvement or the special assessments to be levied therefor may appear and object thereto at the time and place mentioned or may at any time previous thereto file objections with the Town Clerk. Any person failing to appear at said time and place or to have on file with the Town Clerk objections to said improvement contemplated, in said Resolution of Necessity or to proposed assessments for same shall be deemed to have waived all rights to object thereto.

Dated at Klemme, Iowa, this 16th day of August, 1948.

A. R. ARNOLD,
Town Clerk of the Town of Klemme, Iowa.

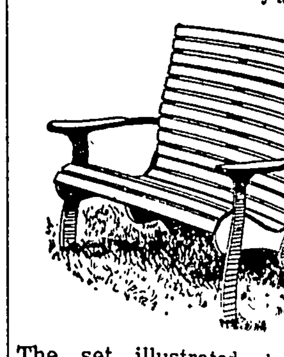
Lawn Furniture Can Be Made at Very Low Cost

MAKE your porch, terrace or lawn an outdoor living room . . . turn your backyard into a picnic ground. You'll be agreeably surprised to see what fun eating out can be. Food takes on an added zest when flavored with the thrill of a picnic.

You can build wonderful pieces of lawn furniture at very low cost.



The set illustrated above is built from patterns. These patterns take all the mystery out of woodworking. Each shows the exact size, shape and length for cutting each part. Wherever two pieces are fastened together, the exact location is indicated on the pattern. Step by step directions explain every part of construction in easy to understand language.

Making a home is traditionally American. The strength of our country rests on the people who have built a home for themselves and their families. Building lawn furniture or any other home improvement is not difficult. You can do it if you try. Each pattern is designed so that no special tools or skill are required. Build a lawn set for immediate use.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

When Your Back Hurts

And Your Strength and Energy Is Below Par

It may be caused by disorder of kidney function that permits poisonous waste to accumulate. For truly many people feel tired, weak and miserable when the kidneys fail to remove excess acids and other waste matter from the blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling. Sometimes frequent and scanty urination with smarting and burning is another sign that something is wrong with the kidneys or bladder.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. It is better to rely on a medicine that has won countrywide approval than on something less favorably known. Doan's have been tried and tested many years. Are at all drug stores. Get Doan's today.

elephant?" Daddy didn't feel plotting a new story. "It will to be Goldilocks," he said.

bara clapped her little chub- hands. "Goody," she cried, t does the elephant do in the Daddy?"

ut I don't know any elephant " emember the one you read out e book that you wrote?" This George Henry trying to refresh Daddy's memory.

ddy tried to think over the ple stories that he had written ad had published. He couldn't an elephant story that had hing to do with three bears.

Daddy, it wasn't in the " George Henry suddenly re- bered, "you just told it to us."

e easiest thing to do, Daddy ded, was to make up a story, rush the children off to bed.

ring the day," he continued, sun shone bright on the cabin kept the three bears warm."

hat was the bears' names?" ara wanted to know.

ere could be no question about names Whether it was bears, ducks or rabbits, the names to be the same.

ne bear's name was Barbara, er George Henry, and the Sally " ly was the children's eight- old sister. She had just start- to take violin lessons, and Daddy d hear her in her bedroom try- to squeak some notes out of the ring.

I was saying, the bears were warm in the daytime by the sun. But at night when the sun to sleep, it got very cold, and ears had to keep a fire in the th of the open fire place."

e telephone bell rang, and as children's mother came from kitchen to answer it, Daddy re- ed silent. This was a rule in home. No one talked while one else was speaking on the hone.

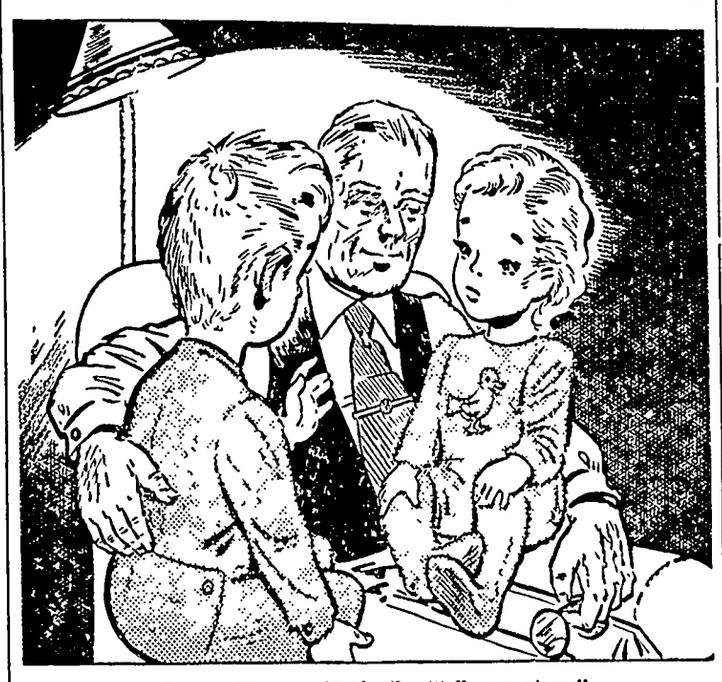
The children hugged against Daddy. He thought they might go to sleep.

Their mother talked for several minutes. Daddy gathered from the things she said that she was giving Mrs. Piper, a neighbor who lived up the street, a recipe for cheese pie.

When his wife went back to the kitchen, Daddy looked at the children. Their eyes were closed. Ah, no more story telling tonight, he thought.

George Henry opened sleepy eyes. "So the three bears had to keep a fire at night—"

Daddy began to talk softly, soothingly. This would put the children sound to sleep. "The bears had to have wood for their fire, so every day they went into the woods to chop down a tree."



George Henry said bluntly, "tell us a story."

"Louder, Daddy," Barbara told him, "I can hardly hear you."

George Henry wiggled a bit and asked, "Where's the elephant?"

"The elephant?" Daddy had forgotten there was supposed to be an elephant. "The elephant, uh, we'll get to him . . . the bears had to go to the woods for fire wood. One day Sally bear was chopping down a tree. It was a big tree, for most of the small trees had already been burned, and she became tired. George Henry bear took the axe and began to chop—chop—chop."

"What about the elephant, Daddy?" It was Barbara this time.

"Suddenly the bears heard another sound in the woods George Henry bear stopped chopping to listen. Thump—thump—thump! All three bears were startled. They never heard this noise before "

Barbara smiled, "Here comes the elephant."

Daddy ignored the interruption. "George Henry bear dropped the axe and the three bears ran as fast as they could back to their cabin, and they locked themselves in."

George Henry sat up straight, all sleep disappearing from his bright blue eyes. "Did the elephant chase them, Daddy?" he asked.

Daddy sighed deeply and said sternly, "Will you two settle down and allow me to tell the story?"

Meekly, George Henry settled back in Daddy's arm.

"That night it was very cold and the bears had no wood to burn. They huddled near the damp fire place and almost froze."

"The poor bears," Barbara mumbled. She looked like she might cry.

"The next day," Daddy said hurriedly, "the bears decided that they just had to have wood, so they went back among the trees. After they made sure that no other animal was in sight, Sally bear picked up the axe and began to chop—chop—chop."

"Please Daddy, tell us about the elephant." George Henry held his hand against his mouth to hold back a yawn.

"But before long, the thumping noise again rang out in the woods. Thump—thump—thump. The bears were too frightened to run this time, and suddenly a big animal stuck its head and long trunk between two trees and glanced bewildered at the three shivering bears."

Barbara clapped her hands. "The elephant!" she cried.

"Let it be a good elephant, heh Daddy?" George Henry said.

"All right, it was a good elephant, and it asked the bears why they were frightened? None of the bears dared to speak, so the elephant looked around and saw that they had been chopping at the tree."

"So the elephant chopped the tree down for them," George Henry volunteered.

Daddy smiled. This would be better than bringing in a lot of complications and would get the children to bed in a hurry.

"Yes, the elephant took the axe in his trunk and chopped the tree into small pieces. The bears then saw that the elephant was a friend, so each gathered an arm load of wood, while the elephant took a big load in his trunk, and they all went back to the cabin."

"Is that all, Daddy?" Barbara wanted to know.

"Not quite The elephant was so big that it couldn't go through the door of the cabin, and when night came, it had to stay out in the cold, while the bears kept warm near the fire."

GEORGE HENRY could hardly keep his eyes open but he said, "Let the good elephant go inside near the fire, Daddy."

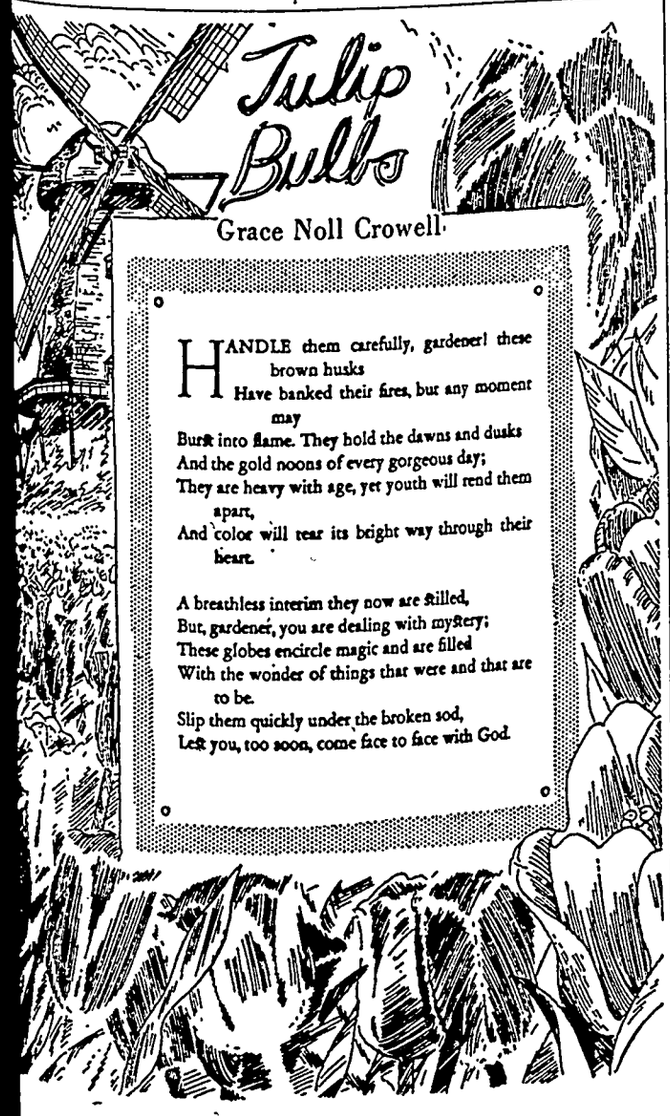
Daddy thought for a moment. How could he get the elephant inside? Suddenly he knew how. "The following morning the bears were so sorry for the elephant that they got out all their carpenter tools and busily went to work."

"Did they build another cabin?" Barbara asked this although Daddy thought she was asleep.

"No, they just made a bigger doorway—and the three bears and the elephant lived happily together ever after."

Barbara and George Henry slept peacefully as Daddy carried them upstairs and put them in their beds.

Then Daddy went downstairs, picked up the newspaper and settled back in his chair. But he didn't read the newspaper. It dropped to the floor as he closed his eyes and went to sleep.



Tulip Bulbs
Grace Noll Crowell
HANDLE them carefully, gardener! these brown husks
Have banked their fires, but any moment may Burst into flame. They hold the dawns and dusks
And the gold noons of every gorgeous day;
They are heavy with age, yet youth will rend them apart,
And color will tear its bright way through their heart.
A breathless interim they now are stilled,
But, gardener, you are dealing with mystery;
These globes encircle magic and are filled
With the wonder of things that were and that are to be.
Slip them quickly under the broken sod,
Lest you, too soon, come face to face with God.

SALESMANSHIP IS DEAD

Speakers at a national convention of salesmanship executives declared that the sellers' market is over and that salesmanship, now at its lowest ebb, must devise new techniques. Lowest ebb is an understatement. Salesmanship, in the eyes of the customer, has become not only dead but mummified. In the period of shortages and wide customer demand the average salesman has ceased to function, except in the manner of a deep-freeze unit.

It has become an exploit similar to a polar dash to approach the fellow who was supposed to be interested in selling something.

The customer's greatest need in contacting a salesman has been proper defrosting equipment.

It has been years since we saw a clerk or salesman in many fields smile, register interest or show half of 1 per cent politeness toward the buyer. We have frequently had our lower extremities frozen on the trip from the store or agency entrance to the salesman's desk.

The old-fashioned American salesman who used to spring to his feet when a customer appeared, extend the glad hand, show a keen desire to be of service and cultivate good will or bust has largely disappeared.

We can remember away back when, even if the staff had no stock on hand, it never greeted a customer with that "less than the dust beneath my chariot wheels" manner, and when every salesman or clerk realized that there was no percentage in making a customer feel that a visit to a salesroom or store was like a trip through the icepack.

Too many salesmen today don't even bother to show routine civility. They have developed complete indifference to a high art. They give you the old "This is all so unnecessary and annoying" look if you ask more than two questions of 10 words each. They give you the definite feeling that you are indulging in a futile dialogue in an Eskimo igloo.

The other day we went to an auto salesroom back home and found even the head of the company giving an over-all demonstration of how to freeze the prospective buyer in three simple lessons. He was on the floor supposedly assisting, and at the moment talking listlessly with a prospect. We drew near and awaited our turn. The gent walked off to a far corner without as much as an "Excuse me I'll be with you in a moment."

Up to this time we had assumed that at least the boss knew the fundamental rules of holding customer good will.

TRANSFER OF DUROCHER

It was obvious that Mel Ott couldn't stand up against Leo Durocher: He was using catchers for catchers.

Many good gags have followed the Durocher incident but we liked Walker Cooper's "All catchers out for infield practice, boys!" when his team got the news.

How to score the Durocher play puzzles us, but we would be inclined to say that he slid from first in Brooklyn to second in New York but was called out by Rickey for failing to touch Brooklyn bridge.

Fashion experts say that skimpiness in bathing suits has gone the limit and that a "new look" costume soon will appear, which may include a return to the bloomers, blouse and stockings milady used to wear at the beach. This will aggravate traffic. Think of the crowds that would be drawn to the beaches by the sight of women with clothes on.

Charges of communistic control of store unions in New York are growing by the hour. We now hear that to all queries how to reach a department, the information clerk says, "Just keep bearing to the left all the way."

New Insecticides to Save Considerable Grain Damage

A new and safe insecticide material, which itself can save more grain from damage by insects than that needed for the relief of Europe, now is in production, and insecticides made from it are being made available to the consumer in quantity, says Glenn Haskell, president of U. S. Industrial Chemicals.

The new insecticide, which can be used with complete freedom where food is handled, is known as pyrenone. After three years of exhaustive tests, it has been found effective against a broad range of insect life.

The new insecticide is versatile in its application, and can be used in oil sprays, aerosols, emulsions, dusts or wettable powders. Its non-toxic nature makes it safe for use under any circumstances, Haskell says.

It can be sprayed on the interiors of grain bins, where insects have been taking an annual toll of 300 million bushels of grain in the United States alone, or three times the 100 million bushels needed for the relief of Europe. It can be used safely on growing foods, feeds of animals or anywhere that food is processed or prepared for human consumption. It has complete safety in household or garden use, and can be used directly on animals, without damaging effect to animals or to meat and dairy products.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 10:25-37.

At the Word of Command

Lesson for August 29, 1948

DO PEOPLE always do what they know is right? You would think so; but they don't. It is strange how many excuses people can think up to get out of doing what they know in their hearts they ought to do.

Dr. Foreman

But not this man Ananias. He was a shining exception. There are three Ananiases in the New Testament, and this one makes up for the other two. One of the others was a rascally priest and one was a famous liar; but this Ananias, another of the "unheralded" characters from the Bible, is famed for going when God said, "Go." We know nothing much else about him, but this is enough.

No Wonder He Hesitated

IT WAS just after the conversion of Saul. At the time of our story, nobody had ever heard of Paul, only of Saul as he was then called; and nobody heard anything good. He was a bitter, ruthless man. He had no use for Christians. Extermination was his only answer to the Christian challenge. The name of Saul brought terror.

On this day of our story Saul had been only three days a Christian. He had had nothing to eat all that time, and he was said to be blind. You may be sure that Christians stayed away from him. His Jerusalem cronies had no doubt given him up as crazy; but no Christian would go near him either. At this point our Ananias had a vision: The Lord told him to go to Saul and lay his hands on him in help and blessing. Naturally Ananias held back. This was a dangerous man, said he. But again the Lord in the vision said, "Go," and Ananias went.

Suppose Ananias had said "No"? That might have changed the whole course of Christian history. How? He could have thought of many an excuse. "Aren't there other men who can baptize Saul as well as I can? . . . This whole vision may be only a mistake . . ." And so forth. But not when it became clear to him that this was God's will, Ananias went, though he still did not like it.

How is it with you? When you know what you ought to do, what is the first thing you think of? How to do it, or how to get out of doing it?

Taking Orders From God

HOW CAN we tell when it is really God who commands us? Most Christians today are suspicious of visions, and well we may be. Too many crazy things have been done by people who saw "visions" for us to trust such experiences very far.

One way in which God's orders come to us is in the Word of God, particularly in the words of Christ. For example, take one of the hardest things Jesus ever said: "LOVE YOUR ENEMIES AND PRAY FOR THOSE WHO PERSECUTE YOU." That sounds tough. It is tough. But it is a command. Yet don't most of us leave that command in the closed Bible and act as if the words had never been said?

That brings up another question. Is it likely that Ananias became fond of Saul all at once? Hardly. Ananias could not have liked the man; there was then nothing about him to like. We know from Paul's own words that people generally were not attracted by his looks. Yet Ananias, who could not have liked Saul, much less been fond of him, went and called him "Brother" and gave him his start in the Christian life.

Do You Know a Saul?

NOT FAR from where you are sitting at this moment there may be someone like Saul. He is a Christian, but a new and (so far) poor one, maybe. Someone nobody believes in, someone you scarcely know. It may be a child out of some low-grade home; it may be an ex-drunkard (not so long over it) or an ex-convict even; perhaps someone who has actually done you a wrong.

But this person may be just where Saul was, needing a friend. God may already have touched his heart, all he needs now is the human touch of a Christian friend. Maybe you can't love him, can't even like him; but if he is a human soul God loves him. If you can help him, then you are his Ananias. You know what you ought to do. Will you do it?

Things Are Rough in Peru

While the U. S. price index rose 8.9 per cent last year, living costs in Peru soared as high as the Andes—increasing 46.1 per cent. Between August, 1939, and December, 1947, living costs rose 49 per cent in the U. S. compared to 207 per cent in Peru, according to the Municipal Finance officers association. Among 11 nations for which comparable statistics are available, Canadian living costs have increased the least since before the war. Though the Canadian price index rose 14.9 per cent in 1947, it is only 45 per cent above the 1939 level of that country.

A Des Moines truck driver backed up to the Chanen firm in Independence recently to unload 900 passenger tires and 600 tubes. When he opened his trailer he found it empty. It turned out that when loading in Des Moines he had hooked his tractor to the wrong semi-truck and had driven all the way to Independence with an empty trailer. As with the fabeled doughnut, of the 600 tires he had delivered only the "holes".

Klemme Business Places Will Close Labor Day, Sept. 6th

THIS WEEK IS LAST WEDNESDAY NIGHT STORES TO BE OPEN

Will Continue To Be Open Every Saturday Night As Usual

Most of the Klemme business houses will be closed on Labor Day, Monday, September 6th. The Klemme schools also enjoy the holiday at the same time. For several years now the Klemme business places have observed Labor Day and with Sunday before Monday together business men will enjoy a brief vacation.

Will Close Wednesday Nights

The stores will be open this week both Wednesday and Saturday nights, but starting next week the stores will not be open on Wednesday night. However, they will continue to be open on Saturday night as in the past. Remember, the stores will be open this week, Sept. 1 Wednesday, but will be closed noon Wednesday, Sept. 8th.

EARLE SMITH SELLS GARAGE HERE TO WILBUR HAEFNER

New Owner Takes Over In November, Smith Goes To Farm

An important business transaction took place in Klemme the past week end when Wilbur Haefner, Liberty township farmer, purchased Earle Smith's garage in Klemme. The deal includes the building, shop equipment and service station business.

Mr. Smith, who purchased the business from Verner Christie in July of last year, has purchased a farm 3½ miles east of Garner on the cemetery road. This is an 80 acre farm and was owned by Earle's uncle, Frank Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Smith will move on their new place in November after Mr. Haefner takes possession, which will be around corn picking time.

Joan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, is a senior in high school this year. As the Smith farm is in the Ventura territory, Joan has enrolled in the Ventura Consolidated Schools and will graduate there next spring.

KLEMME FARMER CITED FOR OUTSTANDING WORK IN CONSERVATION

Virgil Cook, Klemme farmer, was greatly surprised last Thursday when he received a letter from William E. Still, director of Soil Conservation Awards Program for the Goodrich Tire & Rubber Co. of Akron, Ohio, in which Still wrote: "It is my pleasure to inform you that you have been designated by your Soil Conservation District Governing Body as one of the three outstanding conservation farmers in your district."

"Goodrich extends to you sincere congratulations. This letter is to inform you that you will receive a Certificate of Meritorious Achievement in recognition of your efforts."

Mr. Cook was also extended an invitation to a luncheon at Des Moines on Tuesday, Sept. 7th at which all award winners in Goodrich's Soil Conservation Program will be honor guests. Mr. Cook plans to attend this meeting.

Mr. Cook is farming 240 acres, which are laid out in 40 acre plots and is under a 5-year Government Program of approved conservation practices which include tiling, fencing, fertilizing, liming, etc. He has put in some 20,00 feet of tile as part of the program.

TOPEKA, KANSAS (Special) Eighty-four percent of the 1,964 farms in Hancock County, Iowa, are returning an annual cash income that is above the average for the nation's farmers The rating of Hancock County in the cash farm income picture is revealed in a study announced today by the research department of Capper's Farmer from figures of the U. S. Census of Agriculture.

Only 63 of the 3,072 counties in the United States are so well off as Hancock. Twenty-three of these 63 are in Iowa.

By comparison there are 1,662 counties in which less than 30 percent of the farms bring in an income as good as the national average. In 1947 the U. S. average income per farm was $5,150. The research workers of the farm magazine rated each county on the basis of the proportion of its farms that have an income above the national average. Income was the value of farm products sold or used by the farm household. They tabulated figures on 5,859,169 farms in the United States that had a total cash income of $30,174,744,000 last year.

LARGE NUMBER OF KLEMME YOUNG FOLKS WILL GO TO COLLEGE

Klemme will be represented at the various colleges and universities again this year as a large number of young folks are returning to college or will enter for the first time.

The following will attend the State Teachers College at Cedar Falls: Marcelle Josten, Patricia Kudje, Ivan Blumer, Elizabeth Goll, "Bill" Grosshuesch. Dean Jacobs, Awalt Grosshuesch and Donna Hevilin.

Those who will attend Waldorf College at Forest City are Lois Stille. Esther Klinge, Dean Merkel and perhaps Jimmie Thomas.

Eugene Haberkamp is enrolled at Luther College at Decorah and Eddie Grosshuesch will attend Mission House College at Plymouth, Wis. "Bill" Cosgriff will return to the Britt Junior College.

Klemme will be represented at Iowa State College at Ames by Lyle Wilcox, Eunice Larsen, Clarence Larsen, Jr., Winton Etchen, Bruce Arnold and Leo Blumer.

Esther Hartbeck will take up nursing at the Deaconess Hospital at Marshalltown. Betty Ann Kramer and Ruth Smith will take up business courses at Hamilton's University at Mason City. "Red" Buntenbach will return to Upper Iowa at Fayette

If The Times has missed any other names of young people in the community, please let us know so we can add their names to the above list.

NO RUNS, NO HITS, NO ERRORS, NO BALL GAME!

The Britt and Klemme soft ball teams were scheduled to play the opening game of the Garner Legion Celebration tournament at Garner Monday night at 7:30.

The Klemme team, with 12 men in uniform, were on the field shortly after 7:00 o'clock for their warm-up . . . in the dark as the lights had not even been turned on. They were all set to play at 7:30 promptly but the Britt team had not yet showed up. When Britt finally did appear they came with 6 men in uniform and were scouting around trying to pick up players to fill out the team. In the warm-up one of the Britt boys was hit in the face with a ball and that put him out of commission . . . now there were 5 little players in uniform!

At 8.30 p. m. the Britt team was still not ready to play and the next game was scheduled for 9 00 p. m. between Woden and Garner and the Woden team was present ready for a warm-up.

So to heck with Britt. The Klemme boys packed up their bats and went home. So did the fans.

Legion Auxiliary Will Meet On Tuesday Eve., Sept. 7

The Klemme Legion Auxiliary will hold their regular meeting on Tuesday evening, September 7th.

However, the Legion does not meet until the following week.

Stille-Schulz Wedding Took Place At Garner Wednesday

MURIEL STILLE, GARNER, IS BRIDE OF ROBERT SCHULZ, KLEMME

The Methodist Church at Garner was the scene of the marriage of Miss Muriel Stille, daughter of Mr and Mrs. Chet Stille of Garner, to Robert Schulz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Schulz of Klemme, in a single ring ceremony performed by the Rev. Broberg on Wednesday evening, August 25th. The altar was decorated with palms and baskets of gladioli and lighted with candles.

Nuptial music was furnished by Mrs. G. W. Templeton at the piano and by the Youth Choir of the church, who sang "I Love You Truly," and "A Perfect Love." B. C. Berge sang "The Lord's Prayer" following the ceremony

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a white gown of imported French lace with a boat neck, fitted bodice forming into a full skirt and long train. Her veil of French net was finger-tip length and was held in place with a pearl beaded coronet. She carried an orchid on a white Bible with satin streamers. She wore a necklace of pearls, a gift from her father.

Mrs. Lester Neuberger, sister of the groom, was matron of honor and wore a white brocaded taffeta gown with a long peplum and short sleeves. She carried a bouquet of red gladioli.

The two bride's maids were June and Val Stille, sisters of the bride. Both wore white dotted Swiss gowns styled the same as the matron of honor. They also carried bouquets of red gladiouli. Claudia Neuberger, neice of the bridegroom was the flower girl. She wore a floor length dotted Swiss gown with a ruffled dropped shoulder and carried a small colonial bouquet of red gladioli.

The bridegroom wore a summer suit with a carnation boutonniere. Lester Neuberger, his brother-in-law, was best man and Donald Schulz, cousin of the bridegroom, were attendants. Claire and Dean Tompkins were ushers. All wore carnation boutonniers.

Following the ceremony a reception was held in the dining room of the church where the bride's table was decorated with flowers and centered with a three-tier wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and groom.

Marlys Rawson was in charge of the guest book. Iris Abele and De Etta Hartwig were in charge of the gifts and Phyllis Elling and Pearl Miller were in charge of serving.

During the reception music was provided by Mrs. Selby Ballantine on the violin, accompanied by Helen Jean Olson at the piano. Miss June Stille also sang several numbers.

The bride, who is a graduate of the Garner High School, attended Boise Junior College and was employed in the Navy Department at Washington and the past two years by the R. E. A. office.

The bridegroom is a graduate of the Klemme High School and spent two years in the U. S. Army. He has since been farming.

For going away the bride wore a gray sharkskin suit with white accessories and an orchid corsage. The couple took a wedding trip to Minnesota and upon their return will reside in a new home on the Schulz farm east of Klemme.

BRITT PLAYS KLEMME HERE THIS WEEK THURSDAY NIGHT

KLEMME PEOPLE VISITED NATIONAL PARKS ON 5,000 MILE TOUR

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Buseman returned home Saturday noon from a 5,000 mile trip that took them through a number of National Parks, through the west and south.

They first visited the Bad Land and Black Hills of South Dakota; the Yellowstone National Park; Zion Park; Grand Canyon National Park; Byron National Park. The tour took them to Salt Lake City, Phoenix, Arizona and the states of New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma and the Ozark Mountains of Arkansas and Missouri. They also spent a day at the State Fair on the way home.

GOOD MOVIE PROGRAM ASSURED FOR KLEMME THIS FALL AND WINTER

The entertainment committee of the Klemme Civic Club headed by W. F. Pavey has made arrangements for movies in Klemme on each Thursday evening for the fall and winter, at the Community Hall.

Mr. Gerald Kewatt of Rockwell will furnish the equipment and the pictures and the first show will be on Tuesday evening, September 16th.

Mr. Kewatt has an established circut and shows in several North Iowa towns each week. He uses standard equipment and standard film and assured the Civic Club that he will show regularly and have the best of pictures.

HOBO KING OFF FOR IOWA STATE FAIR

King Ben (Hobo) Benson and John Prevatil, artist and sign painter, left early Monday morning for Des Moines to attend the Iowa State Fair.

Mr. Prevatil will enter his famous oil painting, "The Hobo Camp," at the arts exhibition. It pictures Ben Boldt's water tank and the Milwaukee stockyards as a background to the hobo camp. Mr. Prevatil got this inspiration for the picture from a poem King Benson published in his book, Hoboes of America, some years ago after he attended the annual hobo convention. He was four years completing the painting and exhibited it while in Britt in a display window where thousands of folks saw it.—Britt News-Tribune.

Crisp Vegetables Serve as Centerpiece

Summer Vegetables

ARE YOU MAKING the most of your garden? There are so many ways to serve vegetables, especially if you have your own garden-fresh variety on hand.

Of course, you can prepare them with enchanting sauces, or toss them crisp and icy into salads, but have you ever thought of using them in a centerpiece that can be eaten?

There's no disputing the fact that radish roses, celery curls, cucumber wheels and the like are very attractive. And that's the thought of many a smart homemaker who whips these fancy, easy-to-make vegetables into a centerpiece for mealtime.

Fancy gew-gaws that have been centerpiece standbys for too long a time should be retired, as strictly summer-style creations of fresh vegetables put in their place will give the family a combination eye and appetite teaser Try these tricks:

Radish Roses

Select firm, rather long radishes with unwilted leaves. Wash thoroughly and cut tops, leaving about one inch of stem on each. With a thin sharp knife, cut thin slices lengthwise through the radish. Chill in ice water.

Cucumber Wheels

Peel cucumber; using a four-tined fork, score the cucumber lengthwise, then cut in thin slices. Chill in ice water to crisp.

Carrot Curls

Wash and scrape tender young carrots. Using an apple corer, shave off thin pieces lengthwise. Curl each piece around your finger and drop into ice water.

Carrot Straws

Wash, scrape tender young carrots and cut in eighths, then cut in narrow strips about three inches long. Cover with a damp cloth and chill in refrigerator.

Cauliflower Flowerets

Wash carefully by running under cold water; then separate raw cauliflower into flowerets. Chill in salted ice water until crisp.

Scallions

Wash well, trim green stalks. Peel onion if skin is loose or shrivelled and chill in ice water.

Celery Hearts

Wash celery carefully. Remove outer stalk and save for salads or use in cooking. Trim root and cut into an oval shape. Cut through in thirds or quarters. Crisp in ice water.

HERE ARE WAYS to prepare attractive platters of vegetables:

Platter I

Place cauliflower flowerets in one corner of platter, against this the carrot curls, then radish roses. Around this one corner may be placed in sections, the following vegetables: Carrot strips, cucumber wheels and celery hearts.

Platter II

Place well chilled ripe olives and green stuffed olives in center of large platter and separate these with carrot strips and celery hearts. Divide rest of plate into four sections and in each one place the following: Tomato slices, cucumber wheels, scallions and radish roses.

COOKED VEGETABLES also may be used for pretty platters. Each vegetable should be cooked only until it is tender, and served at once. Here's a lovely platter which may be used as a main dish:

LYNN CHAMBERS' MENU

*Vegetable Centerpiece
Sliced Roast Beef and Cheeses
Potatoes Au Gratin Toasted Rolls
Beverage Raspberry Pie
*Recipe Given

Cauliflower
Slivered Green Beans
Tomatoes stuffed with Corn

Wash cauliflower and let stand in salted water for one-half hour to remove any insects. Cook in salted water for 25 to 30 minutes. The tomatoes should be firm. Wash and scoop out insides leaving the shell. Fill this with seasoned kernel corn to which has been added some chopped green pepper These should be baked with just a little water in the bottom of the pan. The green beans should be washed carefully and picked over for any hard ends, then sliced lengthwise. They will take 30 to 40 minutes to cook. The cauliflower should be placed in the center of the platter, then banked with green beans, and the tomatoes with the corn and green pepper are placed around the green beans. Serve with melted butter.

ANOTHER PRETTY SUMMER platter uses entirely different vegetables but is very colorful:

Cabbage with Sliced Carrots
Lima Beans Fried Parsnips

Parboil a large head of cabbage for 10 minutes. Remove all the inside leaves, so that only a few of the larger ones remain, leaving a huge cup. This is filled with carrots which have been sliced, or creamed if preferred, and cooked for 20 minutes. Sprinkle with parsley. Around this place parsnips which have cooked for seven to 15 minutes, then fried until golden brown and crisp in a buttered skillet. Lima beans are shelled and placed around that after cooking for 20 to 30 minutes in boiling, salted water.

Another platter uses a combination of colorful white, green, yellow and red vegetables:

Creamed Potatoes
Carrot Strips Beets with Peas

The potatoes are cooked after peeling, then cubed and creamed. If they are small leave them whole. The carrots are cleaned, cut in strips and cooked just until tender, about 20 minutes. The beets are cooked with skins, which are slipped off in cold water after cooking. Scoop a small hole in the beets and fill with peas. Place the potatoes in the center of the platter, carrots around those, and the beets and peas around the carrots.

IF YOU HAVE a sectioned vegetable dish, you may like to serve a variety of sauces with your vegetables. Here is a nice variety from which to choose to add more snap to vegetables:

Vinegar-Bacon Sauce

Simmer one-fourth cup minced onion in one-fourth cup bacon drippings until tender but not brown. Add one-fourth cup vinegar, one and one-half teaspoons salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper and one-eighth teaspoon sugar. Heat and pour over green beans, brussels sprouts, cabbage, kale or other greens.

Cheese Sauce

Place one-half pound of processed cheese in the top of a double boiler and add one-half cup of milk as soon as cheese melts. This is good with potatoes, cauliflower and broccoli.

LYNN SAYS:
Keep Kitchen Cool
During Hot Days

It's best to do the main part of the cooking early in the day before it becomes so warm. For example, roast meat or bake meat loaf in the morning and serve cold for evening meal.

Au gratin potatoes may be cooked, the cheese melted in a hot sauce, then mixed with potatoes, and the whole dish heated for 15 minutes in the oven.

Prepare dinner during the early morning hours so that it will be crisp and cold when served. Cut fruit or vegetables for salads, make dessert and store in refrigerator during the morning.

Many casserole dishes can be cooked more quickly if partially prepared on top of the range, thus saving oven time.

Use refrigerator desserts, made early in the day, which save time at the last minute and which are refreshing.

More Money Spent During 1948

Americans during 1948 are buying houses and automobiles faster than they can be produced and indebtedness is increasing, according to the Federal Reserve Board's 1948 survey of consumer finances.

Fewer folk are saving in 1948 than the year previous. Some 3 million consumers who had savings bonds in 1947 didn't have them the first of 1948. Consumers are doing more of their paying on a credit basis than a year ago. Because buying has increased, they're using more of their savings than before.

It is expected that about one-fourth of the consumers will spend beyond their income in 1948 as they did in 1947.

KLEMME PROVIDES A NUMBER OF TEACHERS FOR OTHER SCHOOLS

Klemme provides a number of teachers for other schools again this year. Evelyn Arnold will teach at Meservey. Novella Bredbenner and Glenna Gruetzmacher teach in Des Moines schools. Helen Albers will teach at Ventura. Elwyn Jacobs will coach and teach commercial in the Garwin high school, while his wife will teach in the 3rd and 4th grades.

Mrs. Harry Leith is teaching in the high school at Castana, located southeast of Sioux City.

A number of other Klemme teachers will instruct in the rural schools of the county. This list is published in a separate item.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE TO BE HELD AT METHODIST CHURCH SEPT. 5

Rev. H. E. Harvey, who is on a vacation writes that on Sunday, Sept. 5 services will be held at the Klemme Methodist Church at 10:00 a. m. and at Liberty at 11:15.

The Quarterly Conference in charge of Dr. F. E. Burgess will follow the basket dinner at Klemme at noon for all the folks of both churches.

HEAT WAVE BROKEN BY RAINS FRIDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING

The week long heat wave which "fired" some corn fields in Hancock County was broken Friday with a few showers. Friday night and early Saturday morning heavy rains fell in all parts of the state.

Rain was badly needed in this county and the heavy rains will do a lot of good to most crops.

NO LEGION MEETING TUESDAY NIGHT, POSTPONED TO SEPT. 14

KLEMME GIVEN ANOTHER DDT SPRAYING MONDAY

The Mullins crew was in town again Monday and DDT sprayed both the residential and business section of the town. The residential section was to receive four sprayings and the business section five sprayings this season.

Mosquitoes have been quite numerous the past week but this spraying should relieve that condition.

GIRL SCOUTS TOOK CENSUS COUNT IN KLEMME

Some few months ago the Girl Scouts took a population census for the Civic Club. The girls made an accurate check at that time and listed all residents in Klemme. Their total at the time was 561 residents in town, and 9 subburban for a total of 570.

The total count at the present time will exceed that number as quite a few people have moved into town, there have been more births than deaths, so the total count now should be approximately 600 people.

Klemme Creamery Installs Larger Pasteurizing Machine

The Klemme Cooperative Creamery Co. has just installed a larger pasteurizing machine in their plant to replace a smaller machine which was inadequite to handle their volume of business.

The new machine is made of stainless steel and is a spray agitator type which will improve the flavor of both milk and cream.

The Klemme Creamery is a well equipped plant with modern machines for pasteurizing and bottling milk and cream. Plans are being made to install another new vat to replace one that has been in service for 27 years, the oldest piece of equipment in the plant.

NO SMALLPOX IN IOWA

"There have been no cases of smallpox reported in Iowa for the first 33 weeks of 1948," said Dr. Ralph Heeren of the Iowa State Department of Health. "This shows that our smallpox vaccination program which has been operating for the past nine years is paying big dividends to the people of Iowa."

During the nine-year period since smallpox vaccination program began in 1939 the annual average of reported smallpox cases was 189. In the last seven years the average has been 53 cases. In 1947 there were only three cases reported and so far in 1948 there have been no cases reported. For the nine-year period prior to 1939 the annual average of reported cases of smallpox in Iowa was 1,196.

"It is indeed gratifying to see the splendid results that the intensive smallpox vaccination has brought and we cannot help being proud of this record," said Dr. Heeren, "but, we must not relax in our efforts to curb the spread of this disease. Because of the low prevalence of the disease is less possibility of natural immunity and this low prevalence will also eliminate one of the factors that stimulated parents to voluntary vaccination of their babies and children."

Giving children the protection against smallpox is chiefly a parental responsibility and Dr. Heeren urges vaccination of every child between three and twelve months of age and again when the child is old enough for school. Every child or adult who has not already had this protection should be vaccinated.

Because we made such a fine record last year and again this year, let us not become complacent and careless. Smallpox is still a dangerous disease, but it can be avoided through vaccination.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Bumper Crops Due This Year, May Crack High Cost Living; Spy Probe Confusion Mounts

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

SIDETRACKS . . . Two potential witnesses who were expected to add some information to the Washington Red spy hunt were Mrs. Oksana Stepanovna Kosenkina (left) and Alexander Koral. Neither did, however. Mrs. Kosenkina, who taught children of Russian U. N. officials in New York, made headlines by leaping from a third-story window in the Soviet consulate where she allegedly was being held against her will. Koral, billed as a "mystery witness" and accused of being a paid courier for the wartime Communist espionage ring, refused to tell anything he might know on the grounds that he would be incriminating himself.

CROP REPORT:
Momentous

There was momentous news from the nation's farms: In the cards for 1948 was a record-setting corn crop, the second largest wheat crop and substantial increases over last year in oats, barley and rye.

Government estimates, as of August 1, of this year's grain production read like a statistical fantasy of the promised land.

Bureau of agricultural economics reported that a corn crop of 3,506,363,000 bushels is indicated this year, far above 1947's small, weather-plagued crop of 2.4 billion bushels.

An approximate 1,284,323,000 bushels of wheat will be forthcoming this year. Other crop estimates were: Oats, 1,470,444,000 bushels; barley, 313,139,000 bushels, and rye, 26,664,000 bushels.

Trouble grew out of the fact that, although the huge crops are welcome this year, they may set the scene for huge postwar surpluses, mostly of corn and wheat.

Officials contend that there simply aren't enough animals left on the nation's farms to take care of the kind of production being achieved this year, particularly the corn outturn.

Immediate result of this sudden condition of oversupply probably will be the government's starting to support corn prices as soon as the crop starts moving. Other grain supports are likely to be evoked later.

Grain exports will be pushed, of course, but the export market is almost certain to fall off in a year or so because other nations also are intensifying their farm production with considerable success.

Deflation?

Brighter side of the crop situation is the fact that it promises the consumer almost certain relief from inflated food prices sooner or later, since grain supplies and prices are basic in determining cost of living at the household level.

Prices of most grains, as a matter of fact, already have broken. Corn was down to $2.02 a bushel from its postwar peak of $2.80. Wheat was down from $3.13 to $2.09, oats from $1.47 to 74 cents. Further decreases are inevitable when this year's great yield makes itself felt.

Generally, cheaper grain means cheaper feed for livestock. Cheaper feed means less expensive meat in the butcher shop.

This apparently certain relief from the high cost of living is not just around the corner, however. It lies somewhere in the middle future. Prices probably will continue to rise somewhat for the rest of this year, after which the impact of the 1948 crop should be felt, causing them to come down.

Despite the optimistic outlook, there is another problem to complicate the picture. This year's great crops could lay the groundwork for farm gluts that would be followed by costly subsidies in the form of farm price supports.

Should another year of heavy crop yields follow this one, and should there be a recovery of agriculture abroad, tremendous surpluses in grains would result. Thus, U. S. taxpayers would stand to lose in the cost of price supports a good deal of what they might save in food prices.

CONFUSION:
And Spies

America's current top thriller, the Russian spy sensation, had developed more facets than a cylindrical lens in a lighthouse and each one was blinding to the eye of the beholder.

The motley group of persons called to testify before congressional investigating committees was growing and growing. It was getting to the point where even the witnesses had witnesses.

A sensational offshoot of the original spy investigation temporarily stole the spotlight from the main event. This was the battle of the schoolteachers—Mikhail I. Samarin and Mrs. Oksana Stepanovna Kosenkina, both U. N. personnel.

The goings on over this pair of Russian pedagogues seemed to be fairly complicated, but they could be boiled down to a sophisticated international game of run sheep run.

Both Samarin and Mrs. Kosenkina had appeared on the scene as potential witnesses in the congressional investigation. Then things started to happen.

First Mrs. Kosenkina disappeared for a few days. According to the official Soviet version, she had been "captured" by a group of anti-Communist White Russians and held prisoner. Then she was "rescued" by loyal U. S. S. R. subjects. A few days later she leaped from a window in the third story of the Soviet consulate in New York where, she said, she had been held captive. Driven to desperation by fear, she was seriously injured when she took the only way out.

On top of all this the other school teacher, Samarin, also disappeared. He, too, was supposed to be in custody of anti-Commie White Russians. However, information leaked out from the Samarin camp: He wanted to testify; he liked the U. S. and revolted against going back to Russia.

ACCIDENTS:
100,000 Deaths

Possibly the most shocking set of statistics compiled year in and year out in the U. S. is that dealing with the nation's accidental death rate.

In 1947, National Safety council has disclosed, about 100,000 persons died accidentally The full accident toll was approximately 2,000 deaths higher than in 1946.

Accidents in the home accounted for a majority of all the deaths listed by the council. There were 34,500 such fatalities. The total also included 32,300 traffic and 17,000 occupational deaths.

Some of the other facts released in the annual report:

More people died in disasters last year than in 1946—550 in the stupendous Texas City explosion, 167 in a Texas-Oklahoma tornado, 111 in the Centralia, Ill., mine blast, and 198 in airplane crashes.

Total of 20,900 deaths resulted from rural traffic accidents, while city traffic accidents accounted for 11,400 fatalities.

211.9 BILLION

U. S. Personal Income Still on Elevator

Everybody works. Everybody makes money. That is the theme song of the American people who are, nevertheless, twisting and turning in the clutches of an intolerable condition of inflation.

But the money keeps on rolling in. Personal income hit a historic high rate of 211.9 billion dollars in June, the commerce department has reported. That figure is 2.5 billion dollars above the total personal income for May.

Responsible for the large May-to-June increase were the absence of major strikes, impact of third-round wage boosts in durable goods industries and higher prices received by farmers for livestock, the department of commerce said. Wage and salary payments jumped 2.3 billion dollars in June.

YOUTH MONTH:
Awareness

If the day should ever dawn when every family in the nation becomes fully aware that all juvenile delinquency has its beginning in the home, then U. S. society will have reached its Elysian fields.

Once families become endowed with this awareness they will tend to bring pressure to bear to eliminate the secondary factors that contribute to delinquency in young people: School failure, church failure, bad housing and the inevitable shift in ethical values from one generation to the next which are sometimes confusing and frightening to immature minds.

To that end, and because a healthy store of young minds and bodies is the best overall insurance any nation can have, September has been proclaimed Youth Month.

The Theater Owners of America, who feel they have a big stake in the welfare of U. S. youth, have undertaken to organize the principal media of information—newspapers, magazines, radio and motion pictures—to publicize the month.

Aside from the publicity to be accorded the problem of juvenile delinquency, which is the immediate purpose of Youth Month, the observance is more deeply significant in that it provides some evidence that Americans are becoming actively conscious that at least a partial remedy must be found.

Springboard for Youth Month and any other concerted group action that might obtain is a probing and thoughtful report on juvenile delinquency by the National Conference on Prevention and Control of Juvenile Delinquency, Washington, D. C.

A digest of this report, or series of panel reports, covering basic causes and possible solutions of the problem, is well worth a few hours' study on the part of every parent who is aware of his inevitable fallibilities as a guide and leader of his children.

NEW LOW:
Bitterness

While American, British and French ambassadors in Moscow were grimly making peace talk with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov in the Kremlin, general relations between the East and West were sliding to new depths of mutual recrimination.

This state of affairs was not eased any by unsubstantiated reports that the Moscow talks had degenerated into a deadlock and that no progress was being made.

For the most part, however, the animosity was being spread through raucous propaganda by Berlin newspapers, with the publications sponsored by the Russians and the western powers waging a pitched battle of words.

The British-licensed paper Telegraaf reported that the Soviets were getting ready to move great numbers of new troops into Germany and that Russia was pressing toward "sole rule over all of Berlin."

Soviet propaganda instruments, meantime, renewed their overall attacks on the West, demanding that the Berlin city council be ousted and that the whole city be made part of the Soviet zonal administration.

Regardless of any truth implicit in the Berlin newspaper fight it was obvious that the vindictive battle would do much more harm than good to relations between the two power spheres.

It was equally obvious that there was more bitterness and fear at work in Berlin than there was a rational understanding of how to cope with the crisis.

DRAFT:
Questions

This may come as a shock to young future draftees who want the world to know that they are loyal Americans, but just about the only question draft boards will not ask the potential inductee is whether or not he is a Communist and if he is loyal to the U. S.

All the queries in an eight-page questionnaire for draftees deal with the subject's social, economic, physical and marital status.

Ghost of Latvia Recalls Memories of Better Days

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator

WASHINGTON—At the end of one of those few pleasant summer days which Washington gives us, I was walking homeward from a mission in a part of town which I hadn't visited recently. I found myself in a neighborhood which seemed to produce a slightly nostalgic feeling.

The street took a quick up-turn and, for a short block, was quite steep. Most of the houses were new but there was one with a colored glass window such as graced many a home that I visited as a child. Such windows were usually on the staircase landing, at the turn, and when the sun shone through them it tossed a handful of jewels on the carpet. I always wanted to pick them up. That, I thought as I walked along, is nostalgic—childhood memories.

But I was wrong. Soon I realized that the memory which the stained glass window evoked was much more recent. But it did stir ghosts, the ghost of a man and the ghost of a nation, for there is no reason why dead nations, which really never quite died, must not live on in some form. And Washington is not without such disembodied sovereignties. I had seen the man whose memory the multi-colored window had stirred for the first time when he was descending a stairway with just such a window behind him. He was Alfred Bilmanis and he died in July of this year. He was the minister of the republic of Latvia which had "died" eight years ago but according to the state department was and is of such corporeal quality that, along with its sister republics of Lithuania and Estonia, it still possesses diplomatic representatives who are recognized on equal terms with those of living nations.

It was in August of 1940 that the Red army marched into the Baltic states and they became by force majeure, territorially a part of the U. S. S. R.

But the three little democracies were prepared politically, if not diplomatically. A month or so earlier, by due process of parliamentary law, a decree was promulgated which made the Latvian minister to London chief of the Latvian state if the Russians took over her territory. Today Charles Zarena, minister to Britain, remains the head of the diplomatic corps of the republic of Latvia.

Bilmanis continued to serve his ghost-government in the United States after the Russian seizure. Up to then he had helped to keep th bonds firm between us and his little country whose people reached the shores of the Baltic back in the early days of European history, along with the only two other remaining groups which are at least liguistically, if not ethically, related to the Latts: the Finns and the Magyars.

The last president of the free republic of Latvia, Carl Ulmanis was American trained. He lived in Nebraska where he waited in exile and worked for his country's independence. He studied agriculture and when he returned to Latvia in that hopeful heydey of Europe's new republics after World War I, he carried back ideas. One of them was the 4-H clubs.

Latvia was 60 per cent agricultural and among its population of only two million, the 4-H movement grew, adapted of course to its new environment, to 40,000, when I heard of it last before the iron curtain descended.

There were interchanges of visits between the countries and, whenever the big 4-H encampment took place in Washington, the little Latvian legation echoed to the cheerful chatter of American children who drank lemonade and heard the big, smiling man with the expressive ruddy hands, tell of his country and show pictures of the children there at work on their projects or going through their folk dances in the gay costumes of their land.

The American kids looked at the paintings that covered the walls—for Bilmanis was quite a collector. They were allowed gingerly to try the great chair which Napoleon had taken back to France from Moscow, examine the delightful little ivories, the china and the other objets d'art which filled the legation.

And then, one by one, they tripped up the stairs to look at the life-size model of the Latvian girl in the traditional robes of the country, wearing the symbolic necklace made of great discs of amber. Amber had been a Latvian article of export since the earliest traders from the Mediterranean made their way to this northern land, for it was a much admired ornament for the ladies of ancient Rome and Greece. A good necklace was supposed to be worth an Arabian mount.

If there is any amber being collected on Latvian beaches today it is being turned into the coffers of the Kremlin. I can well imagine what happened to the 4-H organizations when the Reds stepped in—they are about as closely akin to the Communist youth as the boy scouts were to the Hitler jugend. But if we are to believe all we hear, Latvia is resisting communization. Only this week I received a copy of the Baltic Review, printed in Sweden. Here is one paragraph:

"With the coming scholastic year war games will be introduced as an obligatory subject in the schools of all the constituent Soviet republics, writes 'Cina,' the organ of the Communist party in Latvia. The paper goes on to say that the international situation demands that children be taught the art of war as early as possible. Military discipline should be instilled in them even before they come to school. Their toys should be model tanks and planes and so-calld children's 'mechanos' or building boxes should consist of parts whereof these objects can be constructed. The author relates about his trip to Russia to study Soviet education and military training and remarks that in this respect the Baltic republics are very backward as yet. Pupils of seven and eight in the schools of Moscow had displayed quite surprising knowledge as regards military matters. Ten year olds had been experts with the rifles and girls had been as competent as boys. Even tiny tots four and five had known the rudiments of military drill. How useful this proficiency may be in a guerilla war, exclaims the author."

What is going to happen to the next generation in the U. S. S. R. itself and in the countries dominated by her? Listen to this further extract from the Baltic Review:

Communists' Ideas About Education

"Every Soviet school manual, every work of fiction for children and young people, every periodical for the rising generation is a manifestation of a war-like spirit worthy of the Huns of old. Innumerable are the glorifications in them of all sorts of heroic exploits of Soviet people during World War II., to enter a military school is represented as the highest aim of every Soviet boy and 80 per cent of the pictures show guns, tanks, infantry or cavalry exercises. Picture books for tiny tots exhibit children playing with rifles, tanks and grenades, every game taught to the young has a military purpose. The little bit of space that is left over from these aggressive and bellicose writings is used to extol the merits of the Communist party and its leaders, Lenin and Stalin. All this literary production exudes such a hate for the whole world, for the bourgeoise, imperialism and capital, that the books of the Hitler jugend seem mild nursery rhymes in comparison."

. . . ghost of a nation . . .

That is not the kind of a state of which Alfred Bilmanis dreamed. He hoped one day to return with his valuable possessions and build a museum in his own restored country. Though he continued to serve as minister, his funds ran low and he had to part with many of his things. However, he did save some of the paintings, Napoleon's chair and the lady and her beads

Perhaps someday others may realize his dream—some happy day—when freedom in Europe is returned and the ghost republics of the Baltic become real once more for the people who inhabit them.

IN WHAT competition does the competitor or contestant take the roughest punishment? Is it football or boxing? Steeplechase riding or water polo? Long-distance running, such as the 5,000 meters, the 10,000 meters or the marathon? Rowing, baseball, tennis or basketball?

We put this discussion up to Tommy Armour, the able golfing Scot who, in his day and time, won the U.S. Open, the British Open, the P.G.A. and more minor tournaments than you can mention.

JONES

"Just what form of punishment do you mean?" Armour asked. "Physical punishment, mental punishment or nerve punishment? They are all entirely different."

"What form of punishment is the hardest to handle?" I asked.

"Physical, punishment, such as you get in football or boxing, is the softest punishment," Armour said. "The toughest to handle is mental or nerve. Ever have a live nerve in a tooth extracted?"

"I think I can see just what you are leading up to," I said. "I think it is a game called golf."

"For a change you are correct," was the silver-haired Scot's answer. "It is golf. Ask Bobby Cruickshank, who before he came over here, was the best lightweight fighter in the British Isles, the best soccer player and one of the best golfers. Not overlooking four years in the Black Watch from 1914 to 1918."

Bobby Has a Reputation

No one can pay a tribute to Cruickshank, now pro at the Richmond Country club, that we don't double and redouble, no matter what the game.

"A knockout punch doesn't hurt," Armour said. "You can take a hammering now and then that won't help you, but it is only physical. Soon over. Football is the same. Few football players even feel pain when in play. They don't know they are hurt until later. I'll bet most of them suffer more from nerves—and I don't mean nerve—than from getting hurt physically.

"But football isn't as tough as golf and I think Joe Louis will tell you the same about the fight game. I'll bet Louis has suffered more in a number of golf matches than he ever suffered in the ring. Why? Nerves.

"I don't think Louis ever suffered anything from nerves in a fight in his life. But I can promise plenty that he's taken quite a beating in nerves at golf. Louis doesn't mind a pretty fair bet. And he's quite a good golfer. But some of these boys in golf are hard to take."

"The punishment you take in golf on an off day or through a tournament is the worst you get in any game. Did you ever get 'the yips?' The 'yips' are nerves that blow up in your wrists when you are playing chip shots or putting. The nerves simply explode and you can do nothing about it. You can ask Walter Hagen or Bobby Jones, two great putters.

"I recall a $10,000 tournament I played in. I had a good lead through the first three rounds. Then I got the 'yips.' I three-putted eight greens I missed seven putts from two to three feet out. I figured each one of these putts cost me $300.

"I would rather have been knocked down six times by Dempsey or Louis. I would rather have been run over by Bronko Nagurski. I took more punishment in the last round that any fighter ever took in a ring.

Nerves Prevent Sleep

"Bobby Jones won 13 national titles. But I'd like to bet no one ever took more nerve punishment. It took him seven years to win his first championship. He couldn't sleep at night or keep food on his stomach on numerous occasions. Jock Hutchison couldn't eat or sleep through an open. Neither could I. I don't think Hagen ever bothered too much about anything."

I recall one occasion in an amateur golf championship, one of the entries was an all-star college tackle—around 220 pounds. He was a good golfer and he lasted through Wednesday. But he collapsed on Thursday and just missed the hospital. His nervous system blew up. He was in a bad way. He never played in another tournament.

The roughest part of golf is that every mistake you make is your own. No opponent has anything directly to do with it. He can't hit one by you, block you, tackle you or knock you out. He can't do anything to you. You inflict your own punishment.

Golf was first called "an 'umblin' game" by George Low over 30 years ago. It is also an infuriating game at times. When Jerry Travers, a great competitor, won his U.S. Open at Baltusrol in 1915, he was a nervous wreck for over two weeks afterwards. And Travers had just about as fine a set of nerves as I've ever seen.

LIFE WITH JEAN

By HELEN LANGWORTHY

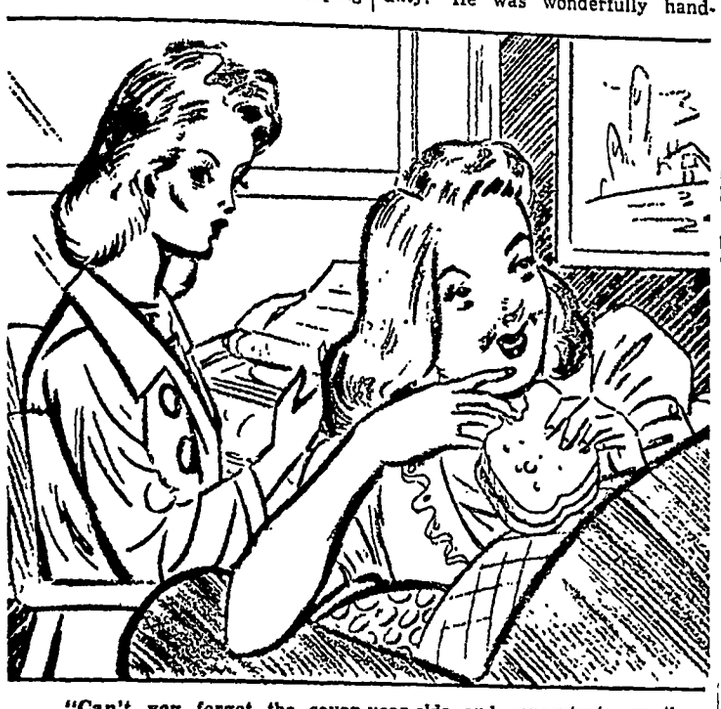
Jean picked up the check, unbelievingly. "Did Timothy and Horatious do this? Oh, I love 'em to pieces. What will we buy first, Mov?"

That evening there was no typing for Doris and Jean mentally spent thousands, maybe millions. "We ought to move to New York," Doris told Jean. "I'm sick of this town. An apartment—with someone else to shovel snow all winter and weed all summer!"

"It will be just too-too wonderful," Jean relaxed in dreams of their future. One minute she appeared as still as the Sleeping Beauty, the next she went tearing to the 'phone. "Gotta tell Petey," she called.

"Wait! Something could go wrong—," Doris cautioned.

But Jean was already saying, "Guess what? Horatious came thru in a big way!"



"Can't you forget the seven-year-olds and concentrate on the 17-year-old?" she asked plaintively after finding Doris typing.

FROM then on things were even more hectic than they usually were around Jean. The crowd dropped in often, thrilling with Jean over the move or mourning that they'd perish if she dared leave.

It seemed to Doris in those frantic weeks that life was a round of typing and cleaning up the kitchen after the raids of Jean's gang. The publishers were getting impatient and already sending a few sample ideas of their promotion plans for the book.

The day it was finished Doris felt vaguely uneasy and went for a long walk. On the path by the river she told herself she wouldn't dare sit down or after all those nights of work she would do a Rip Van Winkle.

Back home Jean came in with her usual, "Mov, I'm starved!" Munching an apple she sat down at her mother's desk and picked up the top page of the new story. She was curious about the excitement her mother had uncorked for the seven-year-old gang.

The title appalled her. It was "Life With Jean." She began reading; she skipped pages. It was all there. Her story. It began with her first date with Petey. They were 12. At a kids' party Jean had thought Petey "hers" but afterwards he had gotten on his bike, waved casually and rode away leaving Jean to walk home alone.

Jean gasped. Skipping a few pages, she read: "—she was washing her face—washing?—practically scrubbing. When asked why, Jean answered calmly, 'Petey kissed me. It wasn't as much fun as in the books.'"

A few pages further Jean read of the time she had caught the front of her dress on a porch railing at a dance and had torn a strip completely off without noticing. On the dance floor she became aware that two inches of her slip showed. But several dances later three other girls had "suffered" similar accidents. Next day 10 girls tried the new style.

Jean sniffled and flipped more pages. There was the account of the time the new life guard began duty. He was wonderfully handsome and Jean had an inspiration to require a rescue. He had paddled all 15 years of her and then shown her the picture of his wife and small boy. Even Jean's wail, "Why are such good looks wasted on married men," was there.

She read of the time Chuck had come to East Branch. His convertible had won Jean over at first. Petey and Chuck eventually settled it "man to man." Jean thrilled hearing of Petey's bloody nose and Chuck's dislocated jaw. "I'm infamous. I'm notorious. I've been fought for," she had crowed.

Jean was crying stormily as her mother came in. "How could you!" she demanded.

Doris' heart sank. "But, honey, it was so cute. After all, New York, new clothes—," she coaxed.

"I'd perish if Petey read this drivel," Jean told her coldly.

"Horsefeathers!" Doris straightened the jumbled pages. "Think what it means. If East Branch smiles a little now, it will be forgotten a year from now."

"I'm not living in a year from now," Jean cried furiously. "It's now!" She blew her nose loudly.

She tugged at her mother's arm. "Say you'll cancel it, Mov. I'd run away, honest." Her voice trembled. "Petey means more to me than old New York."

Doris gave her daughter a very searching look. She took a quivering breath and managed a faint, "You win."

Jean danced, she turned on the radio. "Come on, Mov, let's put the old thing in the furnace." She was all smiles now.

Doris had sat down weakly at her desk. But her voice was stern. "No! Label it yourself, 'Open in 1968.'"

"I'll be frightfully old then," Jean complained. "I'll be aged. 37!"

"But it will make such beautiful reading for your own 'teensters," Doris commented acidly. She ran a clean sheet of white paper into her typewriter and began, "Susy Cow was out in the meadow—."

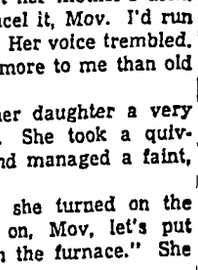
CHAIN GANG

Every season there's a new jewelry fad that sweeps through the high school halls like an Art Lund recording. A few years ago it was those tummy length pearls; last year it was chatelaines. This year it will be 60-inch gold metal chains and here's how you're going to wear them.



FESTOONED FOR FESTIVITIES—With your crepe date dress, wind your chain 'round and 'round again, but achieve a more elaborate festoon effect by pinning the chains up in the center with your favorite brooch. We hope you have one that looks like an antique medal.

WAISTLINE WHIMSEYS—Double your chain and fasten it around your waist with a pin, for a belt that will dress-up your sack dress. Or attach it to your skirt waistband like a watch chain.

And, don't forget that these 60-inch chains are a brand new twist for your wrists, too.

Concentration of Power

THE concentration of economic power in the hands of a few large industries, which control the manufacture, distribution and price of goods destined for the American people, has been brought sharply to the attention of the public consistently during both the 79th and 80th congresses.

Through the President's midyear economic report and the report of the federal trade commission this condition again has been brought into focus. More than 75 per cent of the total output of 121 basic commodities is manufactured by four firms, the report reveals. Says the federal trade commission:

"No great stretch of the imagination is required to foresee that if nothing is done to check the growth of concentration, either the giant corporations will ultimately take over the country or the government will be impelled to step in and impose some form of direct regulation in the public interest."

Three corporations produce 67 per cent of all farm machinery in this country and particularly in the past three years there has been a sharp upward move in mergers and acquisitions in the product of the farm—meat, food and fiber These mergers, these acquisitions and the subsequent fixing of prices are made at the expense of small business and the consuming public in the home towns of the country.

Monopoly in Agriculture

On that same subject but generally unknown is the fact that the agricultural industry, farms and farmers, is following in the path set by the big monopolies. For a report of the census bureau only recently published by the department of agriculture shows that the farms of the nation are getting larger in size and fewer in number, accounting generally for the fact that there are several thousand less farmers in the nation today than 10 years ago.

"Today," says the report, "over half the farm land in the country is in farms of over 500 acres. Farms over 1,000 acres now account for 40 per cent of the farm land."

Considering the fact that there are 1 1 billion acres in farms, this means there are approximately 460 million acres in farms of over 1,000 acres This indicates that the owner-operated farm, although still more desirable, is being crowded, and absentee ownership or corporation or partnership ownership is moving in.

The report shows that even in the midwest, where farms generally are smaller, the average farm has increased 30 acres in 25 years. In Oklahoma, where all farms originally were settled on the 160-acre homestead basis unit, the average farm has increased to 225 acres.

The impact of mechanization, economic pressures, and smaller families has played a part in increasing farm sizes and reducing the number. Another factor is that large food distributing corporations have gone into the field of agriculture and land ownership. Also important is the fact that the census shows that were it not that small 5, 10, and 15 acre tracts, which actually are nothing more than rural residences of urban farmers, still are counted as farms, the percentage of large farms to all farms would be still higher.

Family Farm Disappears

The bureau of agricultural economics declares that "the traditional family-sized farm, long the foundation of American agriculture, has been giving way to much larger commercial units."

Here also the agriculture picture coincides with the concentration of production in business and industry for the report says that "from the top third of the farms come 80 per cent of the total production and the top tenth of these farms produce 50 per cent of the total farm production."

At the other end of the scale, the products of 5 per cent, or about 300,000 farms, had an average value of more than $10,000 each. Of these large farms, 25,000 had an output valued at $40,000 each and 5,000 farms had production valued at from $100,000 to $1,000,000 each.

Measured in acres the largest farms are in the West and Far West. But measured in value of production they are concentrated in the Corn Belt.

Regulation Impends

The question which agricultural economists now are asking, just as business economists are asking, is: "How long before the government will be impelled to step in and impose some form of direct regulation in the public interest or in the interest of the 3.9 million little farmers?" If the big monopolies continue to raid the agricultural land market at the expense of the small farm and the public, then it may not be long in coming.

Home Team

Lesson for September 5, 1948

HUSBAND AND WIFE: Team or tug-of-war? In times when more and more homes are splitting apart, it is refreshing to read the story of one home that stuck together. We do not know whether these two ever had children; no doubt their home was happier if they had. But we do know their names. No one who ever spoke of them mentioned one without the other You could not think of Aquila without thinking of his wife Priscilla (or Prisca for short), or vice versa. They were displaced persons, but that did not keep them down.

Family Trade Union

LIKE ALL JEWS of that time, they had a specialty, a trade they had learned In this case someone had taught Prisca the same trade (or did she learn it from her husband?), so the two of them formed a sort of trade union. They were tentmakers, working not only in heavy tent-cloth but in the tanned skins of which many tents in that time were made

Their home was a workshop, their hands were bent by long use of hard tools, very likely they initialed their produce P & A tents were good tents Their business was good, for we know they always had room for another guest, for another hand at the workbench That was one thing helping their marriage to stick

How many husbands and wives today are working teams? One reason why divorces are more common in cities than on farms is that the city man and his wife seldom have any work in common, while a farmer and his wife are a working team in which each needs the other to succeed. Find some work you two can share, even if it is washing the dishes, and you have something to help you hold together through the years.

More Than Meals

ANOTHER bond that held these together was their hospitality. They had a long list of friends, some of them distinguished. We know about Paul and Apollos and we hear of many others But when Apollos stayed at their house, he was getting more than meals.

If you don't do more for a guest than feed him, he might as well be at a restaurant If you don't do more than amuse him, he might as well be at the movies. What those two did for Apollos was to give him ideas, bigger ideas, truer and better than he had ever had, about the Christian faith No doubt Apollos enjoyed Priscilla's lamb chops, but when he left that home he was not merely a well-fed man but one whose soul had grown.

Here again is something for husband and wife today. What are you doing for the people who come in your door? If they come for dinner you wouldn't insult them with trash or poison. What do you give their minds, their souls? Poison, trash or food?

The Church in Their House

EVIDENTLY the P & A tents made enough money for Priscilla and Aquilla to have a spacious home, for we find Paul in a letter mentioning "the church in their house" This more than anything else kept these two together, a working team You know in every church there are a few key people. They may not be conspicuous, but like the distributor under an automobile hood, if they are not there things do not run smoothly and maybe not at all.

Aquila and Priscilla were like that. Their church naturally revolved around them This must have taken a good deal of their time, no doubt it cost them money, and it must have meant work. But if the church was in their house it was because they wanted it that way It would be hard to believe that they asked for this so as to keep themselves from drifting apart; yet undoubtedly that was one effect of it.

The great majority of divorces are among people who have no connection with the church whatever. Many, of course, are of persons who are on church rolls somewhere. But how many broken marriages do you know among persons who are active in Christian work?

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: I have bronze screens that have been discolored because someone rubbed yellow soap all over them. This has made them green. I have tried to clean them by washing them and also used kerosene, but this has not helped. I would appreciate any suggestions.

ANSWER: I believe wiping the screens with a cloth dampened with ammonia would take off the green discoloration. Be careful of ammonia fumes. If this fails, try a good metal polish. An alternative would be to wash with ordinary vinegar, in which has been dissolved as much salt as will be taken up; then rinse well with clear water. The solution can be made into a paste by the addition of flour.

QUESTION: My chimney has leaked for years. Numerous repairmen could not find the leak. I also had a waterproof coating applied. The leak is over the fireplace. Can you advise me?

ANSWER: There may be breaks in the mortar joints, especially at the joint over the fireplace. Or the bricks themselves may be old and porous. Defective flashings at the roof line might be another cause. Try to get a good chimney mason to visit the house on a rainy day and find out just where the trouble lies. He may advise putting on a chimney cap, for rain may come down the chimney. Perhaps a tuck-pointing job may be needed, and also a coating of cement base paint containing a waterproofer.

First Production of "Faust"

In 1810, Goethe, who was then manager of the Ducal theater at Weimar, Germany, planned a production of "Faust," but it never materialized. After giving up the management of the court theater, he abandoned the project. Elsewhere, however, attempts were made to fashion the 4400 verses of the work to the needs of the stage. In 1819 some scenes from "Faust" were privately produced for the Count Radziwill in Berlin, and another private performance of several scenes was given in Breslau the following year. It was not until 1829, in Brunswick, that the first public performance of the play was given.

Death Rate

There has been a great shift in the causes of death from diseases of youth toward diseases of later years. In 1940, 27 per cent of America was over 45 years of age. This group used more than half of America's medical attention and services. By 1980 those over 45 will make up almost 50 per cent of the population, and they will require much more service. In 1900, one person in 25 was 65 years of age or older; in 1980 the proportion will be one in 10.

TALL WHITE TAPERS
TRUTH and beauty glow from this old Book
Like tall white tapers set to light the way;
O hearts distressed and burdened, if we look
There is a light for every darkened day
Here in the living truth, before our eyes,
To cheer and comfort, and to make us wise.
These are the words of others who have known
Great tribulation, whose bright faith was lit
Out in the dark, and there with God alone
They found His love—the power and strength of it;
They found His everlasting arms and laid
Their burdens in them, and were unafraid.
So we should come, in this bewilderment,
To take the hand that, somehow, we have lost,
Like children groping through the dark, and spent
With things for which we paid too high a cost.
Conning the old Book over, there we find
The light to which we long have been too blind.

Sports

Coach Patterson held opening baseball practice on Wednesday, September 1 with twenty-two candidates reporting which includes four lettermen from last year. The baseball schedule for this fall isn't complte, but the opening game will be with Corwith Sept. 14, on the Klemme diamond.

Band

Band rehearsal started Wednesday, September 1 under the direction of band instructor, Stanley Bulka, who is returning for the second year. Mr. Bulka urges more students to come out for band. Parents who have children that express desire to join the band should contact Mr. Buka immediately. We would like to have as many students as possible take an active part in the school band Mr. Bulka plans to give a talent test to all students next week to find more students who have the talent for music but are not members of the band. All parents are cordially invited to visit band rehearsal regardless whether your child is a member of the band at this time or not. Let's get as many out for band as possible

WILSON AND AGRICULTURE

If there is one state in the union which should be interested in the Senate Committee on Agriculture it is Iowa. Senator George A. Wilson is now the third member of that Committee. All places on committee are determined by seniority, so if Senator Wilson is not returned to the Senate, Iowa will probably have no representation on this body.

But that's not the whole story The present chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture is Senator Capper, of Kansas. He is not a candidate for re-election. So with his retirement, other senators on the committee move up toward the chairmanship. The second member of the committee is Senator George D. Aiken, of Vermont, who automatically would become chairman This would place Senator Wilson in the position of second or ranking member of the committee.

But the story is still not complete. Senator Aiken is not expected to take the chairmanship of the Committee on Agriculture because he is also chairman of another major committee. Thus Senator Wilson, upon his re-election would become the chairman of this important committee. Senator Wilson has always been known as the friend of the farmer, and as chairman of this important committee he would have even a greater opportunity to be of service.

BUD NIEMAN'S TEAM TO PLAY KLEMME HERE FRIDAY NIGHT

Bud Nieman has organized a soft ball team among some of the good ball players in Klemme and Liberty township and will play the Klemme town team Friday night of this week.

Bud is getting a team lined up for next year. This should be a good game.

MILDRED CARLSON IS BRIDE OF HARVEY ANDERSON AT GARNER

Mildred Ileen Carlson, daughter of Tom Carlson of Kanawha, and Harvey Verdi Anderson, son of Mrs. Mary E. Anderson of Goodell, were married August 28 at 1:30 p m., in the St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran parsonage in Garner with the Rev G J Kupke officiating

They were attended by the bridegroom's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Anderson of Klemme

Mrs. Anderson received her education in the Kanawha school and Mr. Anderson in the Klemme school. They will be at home on the Carl Prelipp farm, south of Kanawha, after a wedding trip to the State Fair

KLEMME SCHOOL DISTRICT BOUGHT RURAL SCHOOL HOUSE

At the sale of two school houses by Ell Township on Saturday, August 28th, two school houses east of Klemme were sold The school house 2 miles east of town was purchased by the Klemme Independent District, and the school house four miles east of town was purchased by John Chambers.

A foundation has already been made east of the Klemme School and the rural school house will be moved in this week The Klemme School building is overcrowded and the rural school will be used for the manual training room, while the manual training room will be used for class rooms. This arrangement will help to relieve the congestion in the school

Mr. Chambers expects to move his school building to town and will remodel it into a house.

CPL. ELWOOD HARVEY HOME ON FURLOUGH

Cpl Elwood Harvey of Washington, D C is spending a thirty-five day furlough at the home of his parents, Rev and Mrs. H E. Harvey, in Klemme He accompanied his folks home last week as they returned from their vacation in the East.

Elwood has been stationed at the National Airport in Washington, D. C., as cryptographer since last September Just previous to that time he had spent a year in Rome, Italy He handles both foreign and domestic messages.

The ten million dollar airport is magnificent beyond description. The special offices and buildings are air-conditioned and heavily guarded, and no civilians are allowed near these buildings. Although Elwood is enjoying his work immensely amid such pleasant surroundings, he is looking forward to his discharge early in December.

HERB BAILEY WILL HOLD SALE HERE SATURDAY

KLEMME, WODEN, BRITT AND R. C. WIN FIRST ROUND GAMES

Klemme, Woden, Britt and and the Reformed Church teams won the first round of the County Tournament here Monday afternoon and evening.

Klemme defeated Liberty 16-1, Britt won a thriller over Crystal Lake 7-6, while the R. C. team won over Hayfield 5-2 and Woden wallopped Garner 22-5

R. C. And Woden In Finals

In the semi-finals of the Hancock County soft ball tournament being played at Klemme, the Reformed Church and Woden teams advanced into the Championship game to be played this Wednesday evening.

Both of Tuesday night games were thrillers as R. C. won over Britt 3 to 1 and Woden defeated Klemme 4 to 3.

Klemme and Britt will start the consolation game tonight at 7:30 and the Championship game starts at 9 00 P. M. Both of these games should be thrillers.

MUSIC MOTHERS SPONSOR SOFT BALL GAME

The Klemme Music Mothers are sponsoring a soft ball game at the Klemme field on Monday night, September 13th between the Reformed Church and the Klemme teams

This should be a good game as both teams are fast and play good ball. Klemme won over the R. C. on the Klemme field while the R. C. team defeated Klemme on their field. That makes it all even and the benefit game should be a thriller.

Come to the game Monday night and help the Music Mothers boost their fund for new band uniforms.

BRIDE HONORED AT SHOWER

Mrs Lester Neuberger entertained fifteen ladies at her home Friday afternoon at a kitchen shower in honor of Mrs. Robert Schulz, a recent bride. The afternoon was spent informally after which the hostess served lunch Mrs. Schulz received many nice, useful gifts

FERTILIZER BOUGHT NOW MAY BE SAFELY STORED

Fertilizer bought this fall can be safely stored on the farm and kept in good condition until it is needed, according to H. R. Meldrum, Iowa State College extension agronomist.

Iowa farmers should take delivery on their fertilizer as soon as they can get it, advises Meldrum Fertilizer does not deteriorate with age, and keeping it in prime condition is a matter of following a few simple precautions.

Supplies should be kept only in a dry place. If the storage has a concrete floor, Meldrum recommends crisscrossing boards on the floor to let air circulate under the bags. This also keeps the fertilizer from absorbing the moisture from the concrete.

Fertilizer bags should'nt be piled more than seven high. Otherwise the weight of the bags will cause caking in the bottom of the pile. Occasionally shifting of the top bags to the bottom and the bottom ones to the top will reduce this packing, says Meldrum.

In case of wet weather or exposure cakes some of the fertilizer, it can be put through a hammermill or pulverizer before it is spread.

Goodell Church Repainted

The U. B. Church at Goodell has been repainted and redecorated. Henry Brede and Jules Cook did the work. The new paint job is a fine improvement.

County Farm Sports Festival September 18th At Klemme

The Hancock County Farm Bureau announces the Annual County Farm Sports Festival will be held in Klemme on Saturday, September 18th.

The following events will be staged for competition as listed. Township all-star softball, 4-H boys softball, 4-H girls softball, baseball throwing for distance, basketball free throw, chair quoits for women and girls, clock golf for women and girls, dart throwing for women and girls, dashes for boys and girls 14 years and under, nail driving for girls, football passing and kicking for distance. 4-H girls shuttle relay teams.

Bring a picnic dinner and plan to enter all the contests you are eligible to enter.

Return From Long Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Stille and daughters, Ruth and Lois, returned home Saturday evening from a vacation trip. They visited the Black Hills, the Yellowstone and Glacier National parks. They also visited with Lester's brother Herb and family who live near the Glacier park.

From the Glacier park they went through Salt Lake City and on the return trip visited Denver, Colorado and the scenic places of interest in that region.

SHAKING APPLE TREES DAMAGE FUTURE CROP

Don't shake the tree to get that nice red apple at the top—use a ladder. Careful picking not only protects this year's crop but next year's as well, says Ed Cott, extension horticulturist at Iowa State College.

In the first place, apples that are shaken from the tree or blown down are good only for sauce or canning Of course it is easy to can them as soon as they fall, but a big home-stored apple tastes even better in the winter, reminds Cott.

Next year's apple crop can be considerably reduced by shaking the trees, warns the horticulturist. Some of the fruit may not be ready to drop, and heavy apples sometimes split fruit spurs loose from the heavier branches. These spurs are the small branches that produce the crop the following year.

MINNIE DIRKS DIED SUN. AFTER LONG ILLNESS

Minnie Dirks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Aeiko Koenen was born at Latmer, Iowa, April 6, 1890. She was baptized during the days of infancy and attended the public and Church Schools during her childhood days.

On the 29th of January 1913 she was united in marriage to Henry Dirks of Meservey. Rev. H. Pannkuk performed the ceremony. To this union five children were born. One of these a son Aeiko preceed his mother in death in 1915.

Throughout their married life the Dirks family engaged in farming. They commenced farming at Meservey, and then rented at Klemme, Thornton and again near Klemme. On account of the illness of Mrs. Dirks they moved to Meservey in April of this year.

During the last years Mrs. Dirks suffered more or less from an ailment. During the last year of her life she was bedfast. She bore her cross patiently and without complaint. She fell asleep quietly at 12:15, Sunday morning, September 5th, 1948. She reached the age of 58 years 4 months and 29 days.

Surviving and mourning her death are:

Her husband, Henry Dirks; three sons, Harm of Garner; Ted of Garner and Tenus of Belmond. One daughter. Irene, Mrs. Virgil Waddingham of Meservey; an adopted daughter, Bertha, Mrs. Elmer Traeger of Meservey. Four brothers. John, Jake, Joe and Henry Koenen all of Meservey. Three sisters: Mrs. Fred Blau, Meservey; Mrs. Geo. Blau, Belmond; and Mrs. Herman Fromling of Thornton.

Mrs. Dirks was a faithful member of the Evangelical and Reformed Church at Klemme and attended services regular with her husband as long as her health would permit.

Funeral services were conducted Tuesday afternoon at the Dirks home at 1:45 and the Reformed Church at Meservey at 2:00 P. M. Ministers in charge were Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch of Klemme and Rev. E. Kampmann of Meservey. The Meservey Quartett sang: "Safe In The Arms of Jesus," "We Are Going Down The Valley," and "Face To Face."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S. Registers Cold War Victory; Moscow Talks Headed for Failure; Truman, Congress in Budget Fight

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

COLD WAR

Villian Revealed

At last something had happened that could and did make people understand what this Russian situation was all about.

It had been pretty difficult going for the world public to perceive the basic truth when it was obscured by confusing circumstances like currency reform in Berlin, control of the German Ruhr, a maze of spies at home and political annihilation of small European nations by Russia.

What it all amounted to, as far as most people were concerned, was a mess of verbal pottage that they wouldn't trade, for the comics page any day of the week.

Then it happened. Mrs. Oksana Kosenkina, the Russian school teacher, jumped from a third-story window in the Soviet consulate in New York to achieve the liberty she so desperately sought.

Mikhail Samarin, the other Russian school teacher, was wanted by the Russians but managed to retain his freedom. Refusing the Soviet demand that he return to Russia, he tossed this scallion for the Communists into the propaganda war: "I won't return to death."

And finally, in England Olympic athletes from Czechoslovakia and other Soviet satellite states were steadfastly refusing to return to their home countries after their taste of a free land.

It all added up to the biggest break the western nations have had yet in their propaganda battle with the East.

This was simple, basic, understandable: These people from the land of the Soviets—the schoolteachers and athletes—utterly despised the idea of returning. They simply would not do it.

Thus, it was in the end a few ordinary persons who destroyed the elaborate fabrication which Moscow had constructed to represent to the world the ideal way of life that existed in the Soviet Union.

One Voice of America spokesman said: "This is what we have been waiting for in our war of words. This is something that can be easily understood by people all over the world."

The Communists tried frantically to cover this breach in their curtain by calling it, among other things, an underground conspiracy in the U. S. to wreck any possibility for peace between the two nations.

But the villain's disguise was off now and everyone knew him. Try as they might, the Communists never would be able to explain why two obscure school teachers would seek their freedom so desperately, nor why Russia was so determined to get them back.

PARLEY:

Failure

From Moscow came crushing news for all those hoping for peace: The talks between the western democracies and Russia were reported to be on the brink of failure.

Barring a last-minute miracle in the conferences between the U. S., England, France and Russia, the East-West stalemate would continue, along with the Soviet blockade of Berlin.

It was reported that the western powers were getting ready to stay in Berlin under conditions of economic siege, planning to maintain and enlarge the air lift to supply the 2.5 million persons in their sectors.

There was, however, one slim chance that utter failure could be avoided. The three western ambassadors were scheduled for a final talk with Premier Stalin, and it was a possibility that the negotiations might be rescued. But the odds against agreement stood at about five to one, officials said.

If the conference ended in the anticipated failure, it was thought that the Big Four governments would try to conceal the extent of the fiasco from the public in order to avoid the even greater degeneration of East-West relationships that undoubtedly would result if everyone knew just how hopeless the case was.

However, if the Moscow talks did break up in futility it would not mean necessarily that all similar negotiations would be abandoned. It would mean that any further effort to reopen them would be delayed until at least next spring—possibly March—after the election and inauguration.

BUDGET:

Unbalanced

Will there be a surplus or deficit in the government's budget at the end of this fiscal year?

It was a question good for a lot of political haymaking, and both President Truman and his Republican opponents in congress went to work with a will.

Mr. Truman's forecast was that the government would be 1.5 billion dollars in the red next June. In his mid-year budget report he blamed the Republicans' "ill-timed" five-billion-dollar tax cut for putting the nation back in the hole.

Stricken with horror, GOP lawmakers rapped back sharply: Far from harboring a deficit, they said, the treasury will close its books next June with a surplus of between five and six billion dollars.

The President had juggled figures for political campaign effect, the Republicans charged bitterly.

"Another of the weird distortions which are coming from the White House while its occupant is a nervous candidate for re-election," commented Sen. Styles Bridges (Rep., N. H.) mordaciously.

Mr. Truman had said that federal expenditures this year would hit 42 billion dollars, while Republicans claim that actual expenses will total 38 billion. They charged, too, that the President had figured the national income 3.4 billion dollars too low for the year.

Just who was right in the matter, if anyone, was impossible to say. The entire affair had many of the characteristics of the kind of tempest in a teapot that is a run-of-the-mill event in an election year.

Actually, even if President Truman's estimate turns out to be the correct one, the books still will show an "adjusted surplus," despite the 1.5-billion-dollar operating deficit. That is because congress provided that three billion of the surplus last year should be shifted to this year's accounts to help meet foreign aid costs.

PSYCHIATRY:

War Cure

How can the world prevent wars? Use of psychiatry would be a big help, according to Dr. John Milne Murray, professor of clinical psychiatry at Boston university.

A psychiatrist, he said, is one who seeks the reason for the failure of human relations in the individual rather than in the mass.

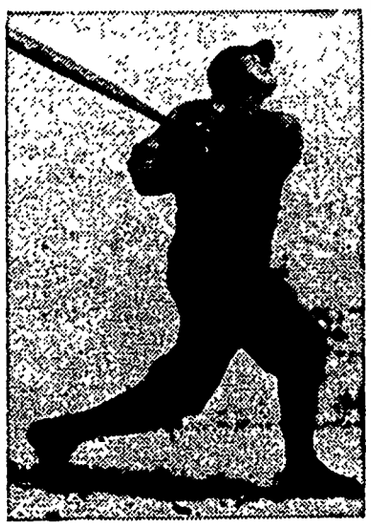
"But," he asked, "what is war except a mass breakdown of inadequate relations ending up in a tremendous burst of self-destruction?"

Take, for instance, the reactions of a child trying to adjust itself to a harsh environment. Under stress the child may revert to archaic forms of behavior, and that is very similar to the impulse of destruction which, on a world-wide scale, becomes war.

Therefore, knowledge of mass human reactions should be employed to abolish war, Dr. Murray concluded.

Actually, it's all very simple. If people didn't act the way they do they wouldn't have to fight each other. The trick is to make them understand that.

Out of the Park



In some dimly seen future time baseball record books might fall into dust, but there will be those who still talk of Babe Ruth. And among kids the legend of the Babe might grow into this: Every baseball he ever hit he hit for a home run. And some might smile at the exaggeration but say nothing because it will be a magnificent story.

Paper Work

War-guilt trials of the Japanese war lords in Tokyo produced literally tons of evidence—bale after bale of recorded testimony and documentary proof of the Jap war criminals' carryings-on. Job of translating all the data will take five weeks, after which the international military tribunal will hand down its verdicts.

MASARYK:

Murdered?

Last March 10 Jan Masaryk, foreign minister of Czechoslovakia under the Communist regime, fell to his death from a third-story window in the foreign office in Prague.

Since then Masaryk's friends, as well as many who never knew him but admired him because of his hopeless fight in behalf of Czechoslovakia's national liberty, have speculated long as to whether he committed suicide or was killed by the Communists who wanted him out of the way.

The official Communist version of the incident was suicide, but too many persons had too many doubts to let it rest at that.

Then, suddenly, last month the doubts were crystallized. Dr. Oskar Klinger, Masaryk's personal physician, asserted that the Czech statesman did not commit suicide.

He was sure of that, he said, because he and Masaryk had planned to escape by plane to Great Britain on the very day that Masaryk died.

Klinger said that the security police discovered Masaryk's plan to flee and came to his rooms that night to arrest or kill him. Defending himself, Masaryk shot and killed possibly four men.

With the remaining men closing in, Klinger's version went, Masaryk was forced closer and closer to the window. Then, the men either threw him out the window or, overwhelmed by fear, Masaryk flung himself out.

In proof of his conviction, Klinger offered this evidence:

Masaryk would never have committed suicide because he was afraid of physical pain. Also, he left no note or letter—a usual practice in suicides.

Shots were heard in the building the night he died, and four coffins were carried from the place that morning before the Czech commission arrived to inspect Masaryk's body, indicating that four persons might have been killed during the night.

? Current Events ?

Here are five questions, based on recent happenings in the news, which are guaranteed not to keep you awake nights. Unless, that is, you stay up late to read the paper anyway.

1. Several witnesses before the house un-American activities committee, refusing to answer questions about Communist activities, invoked the fifth amendment to the Constitution. What does that amendment say?

2. President Truman said recently that a woman president of the U. S. "was not only a possibility, but a probability" some day. At present the Constitution prohibits a woman from becoming president. True or false?

3. Population of the U. S. is 143,414,000. Name the nations that have larger populations in order of their size.

4. What outstanding war events took place three years ago on these dates: August 8, August 9, August 14?

5. Born in 1865, he was governor of Kansas from 1915 to 1919 and became a senator in 1919. Recently he retired from the senate as its senior member in point of service. Who is he?

ANSWERS

1. "No person . . . shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself . . ."
2. False. Only presidential qualifications required are that he be born in the U. S., be a resident of the country for 14 years and at least 35 years old.
3. China (470 million), Union of India (389 million), U. S. S. R. (193 million).
4. August 8 Nagasaki was atom bombed; August 9 Russia declared war on Japan; August 14 Japan surrendered.
5. Sen. Arthur Capper (Rep., Kas.)

BOXCARS:

No Worries

Despite all-time record production and the bumper crops forecast for this year, U. S. railroads do not expect as tight a boxcar situation this autumn as has prevailed during the past several years.

Southwestern grain, bulking larger than any other section, has begun to taper off, more cars are available in the Northwest this year than last and terminals still have space for storage.

Washington Digest

Nation's Grasslands Stand For Security in Agriculture

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—"The grasslands, hay lands and forested range lands of the entire United States cover more than a billion acres, nearly 60 per cent of the total land area. They furnish about half of the feed for all the livestock."

That statement is quoted from the new AGRICULTURE YEAR BOOK titled "Grass," last copies of which now are being delivered to congressmen for their constituents.

Purpose of this book is to contribute to the lore and practice of the American farmer so he may help to attain "permanency in agriculture."

This permanency is obtainable, says P. V. Cardon, in the opening chapter of this splendid 900-page book, by means of "—an agriculture that is stable and secure for farm and farmers, consistent in prices and earnings; an agriculture that can satisfy indefinitely all our needs of food, fibre and shelter in keeping with the living standards we set. Everybody has a stake in a permanent agriculture."

BAUKHAGE

Grassland is, according to the many experts who have contributed to this volume, the foundation of security in agriculture.

Grasslands, by the sheer force of their need, have increased from an original 700 million acres to the present billion. Believers in grass expect that acreage to be increased, and I have no doubt that this book will help.

Grass means to these students of the Gramineae family, wheat, corn, rice, sugarcane, sorghum, millet, barley, oats, many of the sod crops which provide forage or pasturage and the associated legumes, clover, lespedezas, alfalfa and others.

The trend toward grassland agriculture in America existed for some 10 years but was interrupted for intensive cultivation during the war. Now it is increasing again, according to Cardon who has been engaged in agricultural research since 1910. But he points out that grassland's agriculture supplements rather than replaces other farm production — for example, livestock production, with which it is inseparably linked.

"Grassland agriculture," he says, "under good management may equal or increase the production of digestible nutrients, reduce materially the labor needed to grow them and lower the cost of supplying protein necessary to nourish animals."

There are many interesting and widely varying chapters, progressing from the general to the more specific. The editor, Alfred Stefferud, has summarized the book as separated into four parts. The first is an examination of grass as it applies to people anywhere with the emphasis on livestock and soils and conservation. Forage for livestock, the use and value of pastures, grass and rotations, the range, as a major resource and grass "for happier living" on the playing fields, lawns, highway shoulders and airfields.

Other parts of the book are devoted to the uses, nature and identification of various grasses and finally there are detailed charts, tables, recommendations for seedings and mixtures.

Scope of the topics is wide, for the subject involves not only the varying conditions of soil and climate, but also social conditions affecting the tenure of land and the lives of the people, along with shifts in national policies and political trends.

There is no more striking example of how these purely external conditions affect the farmer than in England today, where a complete change in that country's agriculture was brought about during the war and continued since. The great parks, private estates, preserves and forests have been broken up under pressure to raise food which formerly was imported.

The general trends in America have been less obstructed by external influences.

"Grass" is a book for city-man as well as farmer, and among the vast compilation of data resulting from experiment, record and research, there are even a few pages given to a panegyric whose poetic fervor makes up for what may be a lack of purely scientific background.

I can't help quoting from the article, "In Praise of Blue Grass," by John James Ingalls who was senator from Kansas from 1873 to 1891. It is reprinted from the Kansas magazine in which it appeared in 1872, and has been widely quoted ever since.

After describing the beauties of a ride through his "primeval winter in Kansas," Ingalls describes his descent into a valley where, he says, was created "the strange spectacle of June in January," peculiar to his native state.

"A sudden descent into the sheltered valley," he writes, "revealed an unexpected crescent of dazzling verdure, glittering like a meadow in early spring, unreal as an incantation, surprising as the sea to the soldiers of Zenophon as they stood upon the shore and shouted 'Thalatta!' It was Blue Grass, unknown in Eden, the final triumph of nature, reserved to compensate her favorite offspring in the new Paradise of Kansas for the loss of the old upon the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates."

Is Truman Another

Boy on Burning Deck?

It may be just as well that Washington has not only its proverbially-unbearable weather, but that it has a political campaign as well to take its mind off more serious troubles.

It started out as a rather dull campaign with the Republicans positive of victory and the Democrats showing an overweening willingness to get used to the idea of looking for another job.

But ever since Harry Truman's peppy speech at the Democratic convention, you frequently run into a Democrat who actually thinks his party has a chance in November.

One loyal adherent to the party of Jackson and Jefferson approached me with a theory that Truman had a very good chance of winning on the psychological basis.

"You know," he said to me, "deep down in the subconscious of every American is a boy-on-the-burning deck complex."

. . . the boy stood on the burning deck,
Whence all but him had fled;
The flame that lit the battle's wreck,
Shone round him o'er the dead.

I didn't get it at first, but the explanation is simple and not illogical. There probably never has been a more outstanding example of a one-man show than Harry Truman's performance at the Democratic convention.

My friend went on: "Most Americans at one time or another have pictured themselves as rising to the occasion, alone and unsupported, taking on all comers, swinging to the right and left regardless of the odds, holding the fort or storming the redoubt or saving the child whence all but him had fled."

"He went on to say: "Americans see this spunky little fighter who wears a confident smile when most of his colleagues have faces as long as a new-look skirt, and they imagine themselves in his place.

"As any schoolboy who has studied psychiatry knows, there will be a transference displacing the affect from one person to another motivated by the unconscious identification of the voter with the boy on the burning deck and from the boy on the burning deck to the Democratic candidate."

Quien sabe?

Sportlight

by GRANTLAND RICE

WHAT is the ruling factor in sport? There can be only one answer. It isn't the manager or the coach, who too often picks up entirely too much credit. It is always the material. It is the fighter—the football player—the baseball player. It is the fellow up front on the firing line.

During the recent winter season, football went on a wild rampage in the shift of coaches. There were shifts all over the map—Navy, Michigan, Harvard, Yale, Washington and Kansas.

Then, in the middle of the baseball season, there was another wild upheaval with Durocher going to the Giants, Shotton back to the Dodgers, Dusty Cooke to the Phillies—the earlier rumors that Joe McCarthy was through — reports of a family friction with the Athletics — trouble in St. Louis — trouble in Chicago—too many reports to follow.

LEAHY

What too many people overlook is this: It is the material, not the coach or the manager, that has the final say. Certainly, the manager and coach have roles to play—often important roles. But not even a Frank Leahy or a Fritz Crisler was ever as important as the material. No Leahy, a great coach, was ever up to a Lujack, a Connor, a Fischer, or a Czarobski.

Of course, a big part of a manager's job is to get the best material. That is also a big part of the coach's job in football—and this goes for the colleges as well as the pros.

A winning baseball team needs that pitcher or that hitter—more than one of them A winning college football team needs that passer, ball carrier and blocker.

The coach gets far too much credit for victory and far too much blame for defeat The same is true of a pennant race. They pile too many olive blossoms on the winner and too many strands of poison ivy on the loser.

Many a big league manager has been made—and many a one wrecked—by the material he had. Don't forget this in the build-up and the knock-over.

Start of Passing

The passing game in college reached its peak last fall. The colleges had Bobby Layne of Texas, Chuck Conerly of Mississippi, Harry Gilmer of Alabama, Johnny Lujack of Notre Dame, Tony Minisi of Penn, Ray Evans of Kansas, Bob Chappius of Michigan and many others.

These have all moved over into the pro group. With Paul Governali, Sammy Baugh, Sid Luckman, Otto Graham, Glenn Dobbs and others at work, the passing game will reach another peak this fall.

Who started the passing game? Here's a contribution from Buck O'Neil, a lusty old-timer:

"Dear Grant:

"I was interested in your column on Merrilat, end at West Point in the decades purpled by time. You spoke of Chicago and Michigan using the forward pass back in 1906, the year that the play was introduced into football.

"Chicago had a pretty fair sort of quarterback that year, fellow named Walter Eckersall. He was 145 pounds of wildcat, and he is the man—I believe—who caught Willie Heston from behind in one game between Chicago and Michigan.

"No matter about that, but Eckie threw passes to Fred Walker, a fine end of the Maroon, and beat the vaunted Minnesota team through the air. Eckersall to Walker was one of the great pass combinations of their day and time.

Ahead of His Time

"Glenn Warner had some great pass experts at Carlisle, and one of the earliest combinations was Mt. Pleasant to Exendine and Gardner. Warner, always ahead of his time in coaching, developed the technique of sending linemen down the field with his ends to block out the halfbacks. The Indians were terrific in the air and, of course, their skill was attributed to some romantic bridge between the Indian and the occult.

"There was nothing mystic about the skill of the Indians, although guys like Exendine and Gardner, and that great lineman of the era, Newashe, who played end and tackle with equal skill and aboriginal ferocity, were really out of this world. The foundation of Carlisle's success was laid on blocking the halfback.

"Navy used the forward pass in 1913, but it was a haphazard thing. Harry Blodgett, a Middle halfback, told me that his orders were to 'fade five yards and throw the ball hard.'"

How About 55 Gallons of Black Coffee?

Coffee and milk, by a wide margin, remain the favorite beverages of American drinkers who will down nearly eight billion gallons of coffee and nearly seven billion gallons of milk in 1948.

The report on the national liquid intake, compiled by the family economics bureau of Northwestern National Life Insurance company, also estimates that about 2.7 billion gallons of beer and 1.7 billion gallons of assorted soft drinks will be consumed this year.

Coffee consumption comes to 55 gallons per capita in 1948. The grand total of 7.95 billion gallons would make a circular lake one and a half miles across and 20 feet deep. It would keep a Niagara falls cataract flowing for 67 minutes—without cream or sugar.

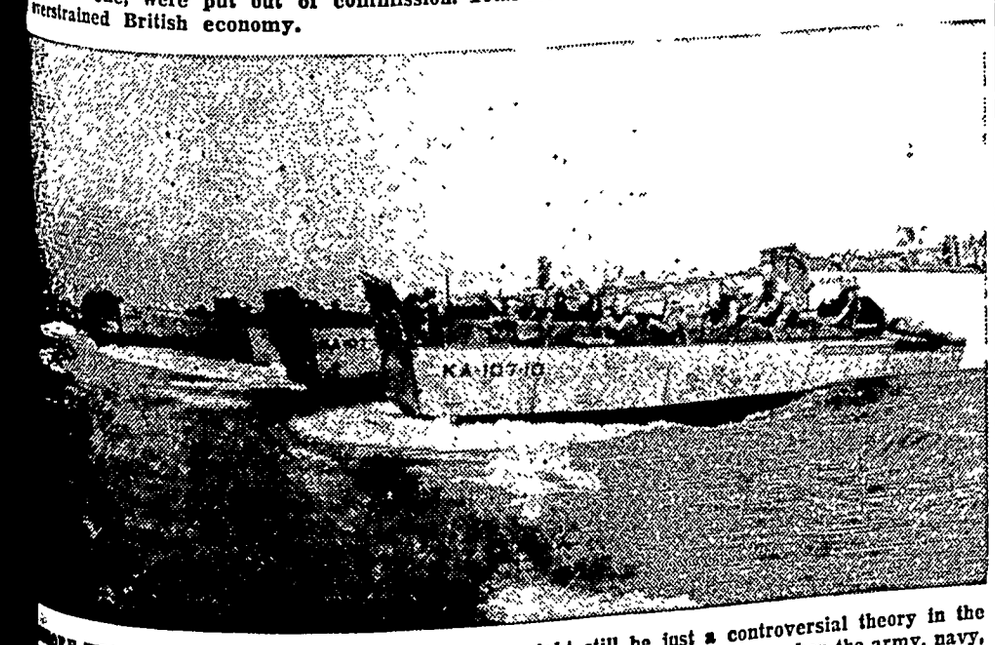
Fighting of the suspended "war" in the Holy Land will not be re- as far as these captive Arab fighting men are concerned unless they escape Jewish imprison- or are released by force of other Arab arms. In the photo, some of the 2,000 Arab prisoners of war through the gate of the stockade where they are held by their Israeli captors. Among the Arab also are a number of Britons, some of whom left British armed forces to join the Arabs.

RAINS CAME AND THE BRIDGE WENT . . . Only the rails and ties survived when floods swept his railroad bridge in Berwickshire, England. Torrential summer rains caused overflowing of riv- streams and inundated more than 1,000 square miles of northern England and Scotland. Hundreds ies were forced to evacuate their homes. Ripening crops were ruined in many localities and rail- like this one, were put out of commission. Total result was an additional severe strain on the al- verstrained British economy.



ORE THAT'S GOING ASHORE . . . Unification might still be just a controversial theory in the sions of the armed forces, but it was much more than that at Norfolk, Va., when the army, navy, and air force combined in a combat landing operation based on the bitter lessons learned on shores the Pacific. It was "Operation Camid" (for West Point cadets and Annapolis midshipmen.) craft are lined up on the beach and spilling their loads of navy middies who are beginning to learn what ground troops are up against when they undertake an invasion of a strongly defend- coast.

The Man for the Job

Lesson for September 12, 1948

HISTORY KNOWS some men only by their nicknames. Stalin is a nickname, so was Charlemagne. And so is Barnabas, one of the best of the early Christians. The apostles nicknamed him "Barnabas" and the name stuck, for it means "Son of Encouragement," and Barnabas' specialty was encouraging people who badly needed it.

Dr. Foreman

Barnabas was not a brilliant man, perhaps not even a strong one, though he had an impressive "front." On a journey in the back districts the natives would take him for Zeus, king of all the gods. But it was not his looks that were important, it was his big heart.

When Saul was converted, there was an awkward situation when that young convert went back to Jerusalem. The little society of Christians there knew Saul for a tiger They had suffered at his hands, they had seen their friends dragged off by his henchmen. So when Saul showed up among the very people he had terrified, when he not only showed up but claimed to be one of them, no wonder they were frightened

All but Barnabas Somehow or other (shall we say it was God's Spirit in him?) Barnabas was not afraid He took Saul the Terrible by the hand, he introduced him to the church leaders, he told them his story, he sponsored Saul as we would say.

An Eye for God

AFTER THAT EXPERIENCE with Saul, Barnabas' friends came to think of him as a man who could probably see the good in any man or situation if there was any good to be seen. So when the headquarters church in old Jerusalem heard of a novel sort of church down in Antioch, they sent this "Son of Encouragement" down to see what went on. It was certainly no church on the Jerusalem pattern; was it a good one, or even a genuine church at all? Barnabas would know And so he did.

Other men could see the large number of church members in Antioch; others could give you statistics about its rate of growth; others could tell you it was bi-racial, a daring experiment then as now. Some applauded, some raised their eyebrows.

But we read that Barnabas had eyes in his soul as well as in his head. What he saw, as he looked at that stirring new church with its new ways, was "the grace of God." All of us can see things on the surface, we can count noses, we can make reports for the papers. But seeing underneath, seeing the grace of God (or the need of it)—that is not so easy Wanted for every church· A Barnabas!

Round Peg—Round Hole

WHEN BARNABAS had taken stock at Antioch he knew the place needed a man, and he knew the man for the place. Off he went across the Taurus mountains to Tarsus, where Saul was doing nothing particular, and he brought Saul to Tarsus and set him to work. Saul turned out to be, as Barnabas expected the round peg for the round hole.

That team was a "natural"—but only Barnabas would have thought of it. Paul fitted in with the church, too. A tireless worker, he was just the man for that vital growing congregation. Getting the right people for the right jobs is still one of the big problems of the Christian church. Many a Sunday School class, for instance, now is withering on the stalk, only because the Sunday school superintendent has never found the right teacher

The Hands of the Church

THE TIME came when Barnabas and Saul were sent out by that same Antioch church to be the first foreign missionairies ever deliberately sent out by any Christian church. The hands of the church were laid on them before they left.

To this day, when a man is set apart, by ordination, for a particular work in the Christian church, hands are laid upon his head. This is more than an antique ceremony, there is more than magic in it.

The laying on of hands may mean different things to different churches, but this at least it always means: The men so ordained are now the hands of the churches they represent.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

NOW IS TIME TO START ON GRASSED WATERWAYS

Iowa farmers who don't begin working on their gullies this fall may be "watching their soil go by" next spring, warns Marvin Anderson, extension agronomist at Iowa State College.

Grassed waterways are one of the oldest soil conservation tools to be used in Iowa.

The waterways should be several feet wider than the heaviest stream that will flow down it after a heavy rain. For handy mowing, no waterway should be less than a rod wide, says Anderson. Making the channel requires plowing, disking or grading-in to form a saucer or U-shaped basin. This saucering spreads out the water, reducing the chances of cutting.

Reed canary grass is one of the best grasses for controlling erosion in gullies and for grassed waterways. Root portions transplanted in moist soil during late August or early Sept. will be well rooted before the ground freezes. Also, they will be able to support themselves when the heavy spring rains come.

Small gullies may be sodded with reed canary grass by transplanting chunks of the established grass, two or three stems in each chunk. Transplant the pieces of sod a few feet apart in the bottom and on the sides up and down the gully. Anderson says to be sure the plantings extend above any steep areas in the gully.

Stands of reed canary grass may be established in shaped and prepared waterways by spreading the rootstocks with a manure spreader and then very thoroughly disking them into the soil. Spreading manure at the same time is desirable. After disking in the manure and the rootstocks, firm the soil with a cultipacker or roller.

Several other legumes and grasses are suitable for waterways. Bromegrass is especially valuable in western Iowa, and timothy is recommended for areas other than the western section. Redtop is a quick starter in the infertile wet areas of southern Iowa. Bluegrass usually does well where there is an average amount of rainfall.

CROP-SHARE FARM LEASE INFLUENCED BY COMBINE

Combines have made small grain harvesting an easier job but have brought new rental problems on crop-share farms.

I. W. Arthur, farm economist at Iowa State College, points out when horses were used, the landlord usually paid for half of the twine and half of the threshing bill, if he got half of the small grain. So, when tenants began to hire combines to harvest small grain and beans, the landlord continued to pay half of the combine bill.

The problem arises when the tenant buys his own combine. If a landlord continues to share the combining costs, he must pay the tenant for the use of the tenant's machinery. Yet, most crop-share leases state that the tenant will furnish the labor and equipment to do the farming, Arthur says.

A variety of arrangements have been made to take care of this problem. However,in most cases the landlord pays for at least part of the combine bill. If he doesn't, he may make it up somewhere else, Arthur says.

Another problem facing the landlords and tenants having a crop-share agreement is how to share soybeans. Should they be shared like corn (usually 50-50) or like oats (usually less than half to the landlord)?

Arthur says that in most cases beans are divided on the same basis as oats in central Iowa. If the landlord pays for half of the seed and for half of the combining, he receives half of the oats or beans. On the other hand, if the tenant pays for all the seed and for all combining expenses, the landlord gets only two-fifths of the oats or beans.

Wage Chemical War On Grubs, Lice and Ticks

Cattle grubs, lice and sheep ticks got a good taste of chemical treatments this year in Iowa, according to a report released this week by Harold Gunderson, extension entomologist at Iowa State College.

Gunderson's report estimated that 300,000 cattle were dusted with rotenone and 25,000 sprayed with the material to control cattle grubs during the 1947-48 season. All were treated twice. He estimates that 100,000 will be sprayed and 400,000 dusted with rotenonoe in the 1948-49 season.

DDT was sprayed on an estimated 2 million cattle to control lice. He estimates that summer sprays will be used on three million cattle next season. The DDT spray treatment was used on about 10,000 sheep to control ticks.

AROUND IOWA

LONG MAY IT WAVE

A flag-lowering ceremony at Iowa Falls lasted longer than was scheduled. A high wind came up, jerking the rope out of the hands of the "ground crew." Flag and rope fluttered straight out from the pole, defying all efforts to get them down. Eventually the wind died down and the ceremony was resumed.

DYNAMITE

Four year old Marion Leff of near Mample Leaf found a dynamite cap last week, and pounded it with a hammer. The resulting blast shattered one hand. Whether it was permanently injured remain to be seen.

YELLOW LINE

Those new-fangled yellow lines in the center of the traffic line fooled Rodney Laphman, Illinois motorist. while traveling on highway 218 near Waverly recently. Attempting to stay "outside" of the yellow mark, he ran his car into the ditch and badly damaged it.

CHECK STUBS

A Bahaman corn-detasseler cashed a check with Julius Gorsch at Marengo recently. The check of the voucher type and when Mr. Gorsch started to prepare his bank deposit, he found that he had cashed the "check stubs" instead of the check. The sheriff and the highway patrol helped him recover.

UPSET

As George Fisbie, Ringsted farmer, attempted to pass a tractor loaded with baled straw, the tractor suddenly swung out to the left, "elbowed" Mr. Fisbie's car into the ditch and kept merrily on its way The driver probably doesn't know that he caused an upset.

WATCH

About a year ago, Kenneth Robb of LeMars lost a watch in a field during harvest time Recently, when the harvester was taken apart for repairs, the "works" oof Mr. Robb's watch were found in the bottom of the machine. The case had disappeared, but the works still run and are as good as new.

SNOW BALLS

J. D. Kduse of Little Rock, Iowa, reports "snowballs" in August. Not the kind that drop from the sky, however. A number of "snow ball" plants, which normally bloom about Decoration Day, have suddenly decided to blossom out there.

SWINDLE

A couple of your men drove up the Mile Holland farm at Inwood, asked for a night's lodging and promised to "help out with the threshing" next day. At supper time they ate enough for six men, jumped in their car and drove off without a thank you.

HITCH HIKER

Paul Dunbar, Lamoni, is apparently the state's champion hitchhiker. When his car broke down out of Salt Lake City, he thumbed an auto transport van. The driver loaded Paul, his wife, baby, six suitcases and automobile into the van and brought him to Des Moines, for free.

SCRUBBERS

Five Maquoketa youths, who swiped some watermelons and broke them up on the school house steps, were busy the next few days taking a preschool short course in washing and scrubbing the school house steps and sidewalk. Maquoketa police acted as instructors.

BROKEN NECK

Diving into the water from the bank of the Skunk River cost James Haines, of Ollie, his life last week. He plunged into the river in about four feet of water, breaking his neck. Companions brought him to the shore.

BUSY MORNING

As Mrs. Bill Buckley was quietly putting a tub of clothes through her washer and also preparing to make pickles, (1) the washing machine over-flowed, (2) her two year old son ran in, tipped over the pickle jars and cut his foot, (3) the neighbor downstairs phoned the complain that water was coming through the ceiling, (4) the telephone rang and a radio announcer told her she would win $19 if she had a certain brand in the house. She didn't but one of the neighbors did and came charging in with it, falling and skinning both knees. It was a busy morning!

TURN ABOUT

When Jim Crittenden of Tripoli pulled a huge muskie into his boat recently, the fish turned the tables and with one big flop capsized the tiny boat and tipped Mr. Crittenden and his father and mother into the lake. They made it to shore safely.

HANCOCK 4-H YOUTH GIVEN SHOW HONORS

One hundred and twenty-eight head of baby beeves sold for $47,581.19 winding up the annual Hancock County junior achievement show at Garner Tuesday of the past week.

The baby beef sale, held at the Garner sales barn averaged $37.69 per hundred, as compared with $31.66 last year. Average weight, 986 pounds.

Buys Top Calf

Red Buntenbach, Garner, paid $44.50 per cwt. for the top calf exhibited by Byron Greiman. Rath Packing company, Waterloo, paid Dick Schutjer $468.88 for the calf bringing the most money per head. Thirty-nine calves sold for over $400 and 13 sold for 40c or over.

Hancock county merchants purchased approximately 64 of the 128 baby beeves sold. The Decker, Wilson & Co., Rath Packing Co., were the other principal buyers.

Winners of the judging contest to represent Hancock County at the state fair are as follows: Winton Dorow, Delwyn Stromer, Paul Zrostlig and Dale Huling.

Shirley Greiman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Addis Greiman of Garner, took her blue ribbon winner in the Angus baby feef class to the state fair from the local achievement show.

Top winners of the special feature contest at the girl's achievement show were announced Tuesday.

Judges Named

The judges, Mrs. Ed Judd of Thompson and Mrs. Ed Bock of Garner praised the junior girls for their good work in clothing construction and in a number of articles exhibited in all classes.

Gloria Haefner of the Liberty Busy Bees club is to represent Hancock County in the state style revue contest at the Iowa state fair.

The Avery Sunbeams club represented by Joan Lowenberg and Harriet Ostendorf are to demonstrate "Stop Spots and Go Stains" at the Iowa state fair.

Other demonstration teams which will represent Hancock County in district contests are: Boone Buzzers club, Audrey Ann Doughan and Carol Geibel, demonstrating "Keeping in Step" will give their demonstration at the Waterloo Cattle Congress this fall.

"Cinderella or Princess" is the demonstration to be given at the North Iowa fair Sept. 7th by Velma Johnson of the Garfield Lively Workers club.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

One Great American Trait

I always think it does a newspaper editor good to get out from behind his desk and see how folks in other parts of America look, and think, and act.

And that's what I've been doing the past weeks, touring the country from Michigan to Texas, California to Maine. It's a mighty encouraging experience. Not only because of the different points of view you run into—but because of the tolerance which reconciles those different points of view.

I mean the tolerance of a Pennsylvania farmer for the habits of his city cousin; the tolerance of folks who vote one way towards those who vote another; the tolerance of those who prefer spring water towards those who enjoy a moderate beverage like beer.

From where I sit, it's that great American trait of tolerance—respect for individual tastes and liberties—that makes this country strong. Let's never lose it!

CAREFULLY CHECK CONDITION OF SILO

Should Be Cleaned and Put In Top Shape Before It Is Filled In Fall

Strong enough to keep silage in and tight enough to keep air out are two fundamentals Iowa farmers should keep in mind when getting their silos in shape for use this fall, according to agricultural engineers at Iowa State College.

Roughage shortages make it unwise for any farmer to take the chance of losing silage because he didn't check and make repairs before filling, they say. Thawing and freezing action, as well as rust rust and corrosion from silage acids, often leave the inside of the silo chipped and rough. Chipped silos deteriorate rapidly, and cause spoilage later.

Clean Thoroughly

Give the silo a good cleaning before making repairs, say the engineers. This means cleaning out the pit and scraping old silage off the walls.

A coat of rich cement to cover irregulations, followed by an application of linseed oil, asphalt or coal tar thinned with gasoline, is recommended for smoothing and protecting the inside of the concrete, tile block and tile stave silos. The protective coating of asphalt or coal tar is necessary to prevent corrosive action by silage acids. The usual precautions taken when handling gasoline should be observed.

Aluminum or galvanized silos need to be checked for rust and corrosion, too Metallic zinc paint may be used either on the outside or inside. A protective coating of asphalt or coal tar is needed with this type of silo, too, regardless of previous treatment. This treatment should be given all silos every few years.

Fill Air Leaks

Air leaks should be carefully filled. They are usually hard to find, but melted paraffin can be used to fill small cracks in mortar joints or between silo staves. The paraffin can best be applied with a brush. Keeping the rods tight helps prevent air leaks.

Wood silos need painting or creosoting to prevent rotting, but lead paints contaminate silage with poisonous lead, warn the engineers.

Picnic Foods

ALL AGREE that picnics are fun, but how's the food holding out? Is that you've already had more than your share during the summer? Variety still there to tempt appetites or are you ready for quick and easy ideas full of action?

If you want to keep anything edible, quick and easy to prepare as well as easy to eat, because you want to get the most out of the picnic, there is nothing better than ar- wich sog- wiches as well as bruised fruit or mussed one will feel better at pic- if you plan well balanced meals to have your share of vitamins and minerals.

Sandwiches are a standby, but they have infinite variety. Add tasty vegetables to the filling you can, thus making the more interesting and more deli-

Use fruit in season, care- washed and wrapped, of course you can enjoy eating it. Should be simple, and are best in square or oblong packed in a box and cut when there's no chance for messing things up this way!

HERE ARE SOME delightful filler sandwiches which I know will be a hit with the folks. Use fillings, and they won't through the bread.

Ham-Vegetable Filling
(Makes 8 sandwiches)
8 slices bread
4 tablespoons softened butter
1 cup deviled ham
½ cup grated raw carrot
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
½ teaspoon salt
Mayonnaise

Use sliced bread and butter. Butter slices spread deviled ham, green pepper, carrot; salt and mayonnaise. Spread carrot mixture on ham and place buttered slice of bread on top. Cut as desired; wrap well.

Salad Sandwiches
(Makes 8)
2 cups chopped hard-cooked eggs
½ cup minced celery
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup minced stuffed olives
Mayonnaise

Mix all ingredients together in order given. Spread filling on slices of whole wheat bread which has been buttered.

Shrimp Sandwiches
(Makes 8)
1 cup canned and cleaned shrimp, crab meat or lobster
2 tablespoons butter or substitute
1 teaspoon minced onion
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ teaspoon mustard
2 tablespoons minced stuffed olives

Use whole wheat bread

Mash shrimp and mix with remaining ingredients. Chill slightly before spreading on

Chicken-Ham Sandwiches
(Makes 6)
1 cup ground, cooked chicken
1 cup ground, cooked ham
¼ cup minced, stuffed olives
2 tablespoons mayonnaise
1 teaspoon lemon juice

LUNCH MAYS:

Chicken Special
Fish Salads

Use fish fresh and nicely firm cooked. Flake a can of salmon, moisten with lemon juice and mayonnaise and fill the hollowed tomatoes. With this pass some crackers and cheese and luncheon

Potato salad takes on an elegant air if it's served in canned tomatoes. Sprinkle with toasted, slivered almonds.

DEVILED EGGS are handy to have on a picnic to eat either with the sandwiches by themselves or with tomatoes or other relishes Here's a tasty way in which you may prepare them without too much work.

Deviled Eggs.
8 hard-cooked eggs
4 tablespoons softened butter
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon prepared mustard
Dash of pepper
1 teaspoon vinegar
Mayonnaise

Cut eggs in half lengthwise and remove yolks. Mash yolks and combine with butter, salt, mustard, pepper and vinegar. Add mayonnaise to make a creamy consistency.

Refill egg white and sprinkle with paprika Chill.

HERE ARE SEASONAL fruits suitable to take on a picnic Apricots, plums, nectarines, peaches, berries, cantaloupes and watermelon. Oranges, apples and bananas are also good standbys. Grapes and cherries are delightful.

Berries and peaches may be washed, sugared and placed in mason jars with tight covers. If you are taking melon, it's best to chill it thoroughly, wrap in waxed paper, and cut and scoop out the seeds just before you serve it.

IF YOU LIKE easy-to-carry cookies to take along with you, serve them with the fruit or as snacks between meals if you are making the picnic a whole day affair.

Mincemeat Goodies
(Makes 4 dozen)
1 cup shortening
2 cups sugar
3 eggs, beaten
3 cups sifted flour
1 cup mincemeat
1 teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon ginger
1 teaspoon cloves
1 teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup chopped nuts

Cream shortening and sugar together until fluffy Add eggs and flour enough to prevent mixture from curdling. Add mincemeat and dry ingredients, sifted together, and the nuts. The amount of flour varies with the amount of liquid in the mincemeat. The mixture should be stiff enough to drop from spoon onto a greased cookie sheet. Bake in a moderate (375 degree) oven about 10 minutes.

Released by WNU Features.

Melons have an affinity for lime seasoning. Marinate wedges or balls of melon in the juice before serving them on crisp lettuce leaves.

Have you ever served a shrimp salad in cucumber cups? Or try the salad in green pepper rings, garnished with wedges of red, ripe, well chilled tomatoes and deviled eggs.

Pimiento cups are a nice innovation for salads. Try filling them with an egg and celery salad.

THE FICTION CORNER

THE RIFLE

By DANIEL F. LINDSAY

"ONLY $30." The clerk smiled down at Jud as he handed him the rifle.

"Uh," Jud hesitated for a moment as his trembling fingers ran along the dull barrel. "I haven't got that much."

"Sorry son." He took it back. Jud's wistful eyes followed him as he sat it in the rack and hurried down the counter. Thirty dollars! He had a sick feeling as he stumbled out of the store. Why, he'd never even had his hands on that much money. As he walked down the street he swung the bag of salt from hand to hand. If a rifle cost that much, think how much that house must have cost. Enough to buy all the rifles in the world.

Reaching the edge of town he started up the twisted mountain road. Unconsciously his bare calloused feet avoided the blistering hot rocks. Any other day he would have walked close to the jagged cut formed by the road. Today he didn't care about the cool shade. His mind was still back at the little store. Maybe his Pa would get it anyway. The thought made him half run. As he rounded the curve he could see his mother waiting for him in the doorway.

"You sure made a quick trip Jud. What you so excited about?"

"I got to talk to Pa" He handed her the bag of salt and went inside for a drink of water. She followed him with amused eyes.

"What about son?" He hung the cup back on its hook and shook his head. "Man talk, mom"

"Oh, I see," she ducked her head. "Well, he's out in the upper pasture" He rushed outside again.

"Pa," he shouted as he reached the edge of the tree ringed field, "It's down at the store."

"What's down at the store, son?" His eyes were affectionate as he watched Jud gallop toward him. "The end of the world done up in pink ribbons?"

"No, Pa" His young face was serious as he slid to a stop. "My rifle The one I want."

"Oh?" Pa looked away uncomfortably "You sure it's the one you want?" How he had dreaded this day All winter long they had talked of guns, particularly the one Jud would get some day. Each time they went to the store Jud would rush eagerly over to the shiny gun case but they never suited him. Gradually it had reached the "maybe, someday" stage. Pa had been glad.

"Sure Pa I went down for a bag of salt and there it was." His eyes were shining. "You ought to see it."

"How much did they say it was, son?" Mentally he braced himself

"Well," his face fell a trifle, "it was $30"

"I see," Pa took his hand, "we'll have to talk about it later Right now I want you to help me mend some fences."

Slowly the afternoon passed for Jud Every minute seemed a year He watched his father's set face out of the corner of his eye. By the time they started back down the path toward the house his heart was heavy Whenever Pa acted like this it meant they didn't have the money Silently he ate his supper and went to bed.

It was several hours before he fell asleep He listened closely to the rise and fall of his father's voice, straining to make out the muffled words It was useless The walls of the old log cabin weren't built for eavesdropping. After a while he heard the sounds of their going to bed and the house was silent. He lay there staring miserably at the ceiling, his mind filled with the deep aching and despair that goes with wanting the unattainable. Finally his tired little brain could stand no more and he fell into a restless sleep.

The early morning sunlight streaming across his face woke him. He started to jump up, then remembered the rifle and sank back. The sounds of hungry animals edged around his consciousness. He could hear Pete, Blackie and Joe, his lame sheep, bleating for him. At least, he shrugged his shoulders, I've got them.

"Son," his mother came in from the kitchen, "As soon as you're dressed your Pa wants to talk to you."

"All right." He hurried into his pants and shirt. At least he would know for sure. His father smiled as he entered.

"Good morning Jud."

"Morning Pa." His eyes searched his father's face for a sign.

"Your mom and I talked about the rifle last night, son." Jud just stood there "And we don't think we can spare the money right now."

"Okay, Pa," his face fell, "$30 is a lot of money."

"But," his father continued, "we did think of a way you could get the rifle if you wanted it bad enough."

"Oh, I do, Pa." His face was one broad smile "I want it more than anything in the world."

"Enough to sell your sheep?"

JUD pushed open the screen door and walked outside without answering. His mother and father exchanged glances and went on with their breakfast.

Once away from the house Jud hurried to the little pen. The sheep hobbled over to his side. He slipped one arm around Pete's neck and his mind went back to the day he had crawled down into the ravine in search of him. He stood there a long time while a chain of memories passed over him. Finally he wiped a tear on his shirt sleeve and went back inside the house.

"I want the rifle, Pa" He held his sturdy little body stiff.

"All right son. It's up to you." His father got to his feet and went outside. Jud sat down at the table, swallowing the lump in his throat. His mother filled his plate with pancakes. He didn't even know they were there. Through the screen door he could hear his sheep being loaded into the battered old truck. A rifle was better anyway. When his father tooted the horn he got up solemn faced and kissed his mother.

All the way to town he kept his eyes away from the back of the truck. Just as they came to the slaughter house he could stand it no longer. "Pa," he burst out, "They won't hurt long, will they?"

"No, son," his father's eyes shone kindly, "They'll never know what happened."

"All right." He stared out of the window while his father sold them. When the man took them away he swallowed hard, then shook his head. His father handed him the money and they drove off.

"Want me to come in too, son?" Pa smiled as they came to the store. Jud shook his head and hurried up the rickety steps. Half a minute later he came back out wearing a proud smile.

"Say, Jud, that's some iron." His father put the box of shells on the seat between them. "Why, it's even better'n mine."

"It sure is a beaut, Pa." He held it upright between his legs all the way home.

All afternoon they could hear the crack of the new rifle echoing down the range. Then toward evening there was a long period of silence. When they called him for supper he pushed open the screen door and shuffled inside. His sigh was heavy. Pa looked up with an understanding smile.

"Regret your bargain, son?"

"No," he shook his head, "but I miss my lame 'uns."

"I know, son. Growing up is tough."

"Yes, Pa." He ran his fingers along the dull barrel. He tried hard not to think about Pete, Blackie and Joe.

"Sure Pa. I went down for a bag of salt and there it was." His eyes were shining. "You ought to see it."

JIVIN' YOUR JEANS

There's an epidemic of blue jeans parties sweeping through teendom. Maybe it's just a reaction to all this "new look" dressing up that's been going on. Even though the new name for a jeans party is a "bums rush," you usually turn up looking pretty elegant—even in jeans. Here are some of the ways you dress them up to the occasion.

SISSY STUFF—One way to feminize your jeans is to cut them off, pedal-pusher length, and edge them with eyelet ruffling. Ditto around the neckline of your tuck-in sweater. No, Elmer—the farmer's daughter never looked like this!

CLIPPED ACCENTS—You'll attract attention (and imitation, too) if you roll up your jeans and hold them in place with clip clothes pins. As a formal touch, paint your clothes pins with red polish and, while it's still moist, sprinkle some sequins on them.

WASP WAISTED—That's how you'll look if you bind your ombre silk scarf, cummerbund fashion around your waistline at the next jeans jamboree. A matching scarf tied around your head please, with long ends hanging gypsy style at one side. Now, all you need is a golden earring—or, maybe, Ray Milland.

GOLD PLATED—For a really new look, gild your jeans with a gold kid belt; wrap fake gold chains around your neck and dive for the oyster in gold kid ballets or sandals. A coat of gilt paint will transform last year's black ballets, in case you've squandered your allowance on malteds and bubble gum.

Try out any of these tricks at the next bums' rush and the only thing blue about your jeans will be the color—see?

AROUND THE HOUSE

To remove coffee or tea stains from teacups, dip a damp cloth in salt and rub the stains away.

You can usually remove rust from iron frying pans with scouring powder and steel wool.

Cardboard milk containers can be torn into pieces which are handy to use as plate scrapers and sink cleaners.

If you make your own fruit cake, here's a super way to do it. Slice the top off an orange and extract the fruit so that the shell is left in one piece. Candy the shell, let it drain dry; then fill it with the fruit cake batter. Steam the whole business for two hours before you bake it; and you end up with fruit cake in an attractive, edible container.

Add a little salt to the water in a double boiler and it will come to a boil more quickly.

Tweezers are handy for getting pinfeathers out of a chicken, but so if paraffin. Pour melted paraffin all over the bird, let it harden, then peel it off. The pesky pinfeathers should come with it.

Always store peanut butter jars upside down. It will help keep the peanut butter from losing its oil.

Keep french dressing in the refrigerator and then drop an ice cube in it just before serving—if you like it thick, that is.

When you forget to put salt in the cooked cereal, dissolve salt in a little boiling water and mix that with the cereal so the taste will be uniform.

Columbus Letter Up for Sale

A rare auction of important historical documents will be held in London soon. Probably the item which will command the highest price is the letter written by Christopher Columbus in which he announced his discovery of the New World.

This letter is one of the 7,000 rare documents dealing with five centuries of North and South American history to be sold. They are in a collection formed by the late Sir Leicester Harmsworth.

Among the other items are the prayer book of Benjamin Franklin and the deed of sale of East New Jersey by William Penn, founder of Pennsylvania.

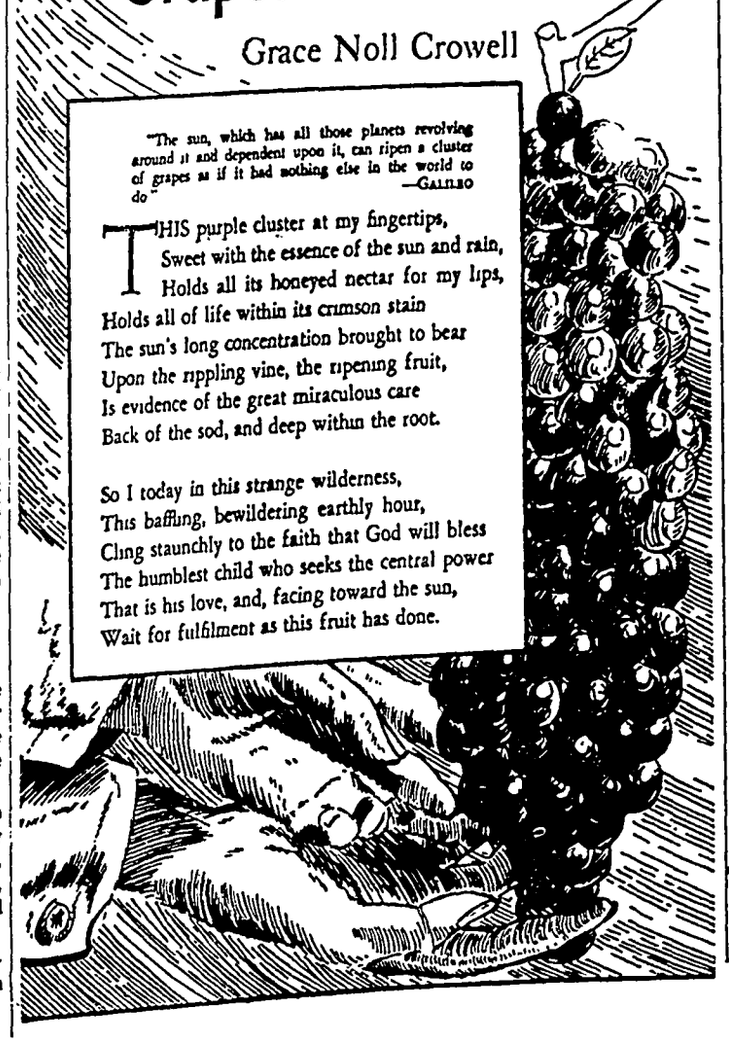
Grapes in the Sun

Grace Noll Crowell



"The sun, which has all those planets revolving around it and dependent upon it, can ripen a cluster of grapes as if it had nothing else in the world to do" —GALILEO

THIS purple cluster at my fingertips,
Sweet with the essence of the sun and rain,
Holds all its honeyed nectar for my lips,
Holds all of life within its crimson stain
The sun's long concentration brought to bear
Upon the rippling vine, the ripening fruit,
Is evidence of the great miraculous care
Back of the sod, and deep within the root.

So I today in this strange wilderness,
This baffling, bewildering earthly hour,
Cling staunchly to the faith that God will bless
The humblest child who seeks the central power
That is his love, and, facing toward the sun,
Wait for fulfilment as this fruit has done.

NEED MORE CRIBS FOR STORING CORN
Materials For Building Them

Scarce and Should Be Ordered Soon

Order corncribs or materials with which to make them early, is the advice C. H. VanVlack, Iowa State College extension agricultural engineer, has to offer Iowa farmers faced with the problem of storing their largest corn crop in history.

Storage facilities for corn are not plentiful. USDA estimates say that additional storage space will have to be provided for 1 out of every 8 bushels of corn produced this year. VanVlack says that it is too late to build terminal storage space or county elevators, so farmers will have to provide storage for corn on the farm.

Can Use Woven Wire

Supplies to build new cribs are scarce. Snow fencing for building temporary structures is probably scarcer than other materials, VanVlack says. However, ordinary woven wire can be used if doubled to hold the corn. Other materials such as poles and lumber are not too difficult to find.

VanVlack urges all farmers to estimate their storage needs now. If more space is needed, consider either a semi-permanent or a temporary rectangular crib. Plans and complete bills of materials for both types of cribs are available by writing to the agricultural Engineering Extension Service at Iowa State College.

Semi-Permanent Crib

He says that the semi-permanent crib will prove more satisfactory if farmers store corn for a couple of years. With the possibility of the price of corn dropping below the government support price, many farmers are likely to seal their corn. This makes long-time storage more probable.

VanVlack reminds that, there is no direct support on the price of corn. To take advantage of the support price, a farmer must accept a loan or enter into a government purchase agreement. This means sealing the crop.

Loans will not be granted unless proper storage is assured. The semi-permanent crib is a frame structure and can be covered with boards or with snow fencing or similar materials. It will provide proper storage.

Rectangular Shape

The crib is rectangular in shape and is built of 2x6 studding and plates, 2x4 rafters, 1x4 side braces and girts and 4x6 end braces. It is tied together with 1x12 braces inside the crib every other stud.

Concrete blocks can be used for a foundation or the crib can be set up on poles. It is covered with either boards and shingles, rolled roofing such as tar paper, or corrugated metal. Ratproofing also is an important feature.

V. F. W. SETS DATE FOR 1948 BUDDY POPPY SALE

"On Saturday, September 25, Ladies Auxiliary of Post 5515 of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, will offer to the citizens of Klemme and surrounding community the V. F. W. Buddy Poppy, the symbol of aid to our needy veterans," Violet Weaver, President of the Auxiliary announced today.

"In all the forty-eight States" people will be buying these little crimson flowers, which are made by our disabled veterans for the benefit of all veterans of all our wars. The V. F. W. feels that in no more fitting way could it honor the memory of the comrades, than by bringing aid to those in need who also served faithfully.

More than half the money donated during the Buddy Poppy sale remains in the comunity to which it is given. In making generous contributions, the communities are actually making an investment in their own future as well as that of the nation in general. A smaller portion of the funds goes to V. F. W. National Rehabilitation Service, to the V. F. W. National Home for orphans and widows of war veterans, and in payment to the hospitalized veteran who made the poppies All the money is spent exclusively for the benefit of the needy veteran and his immediate family.

Since 1922 when the first V. F. W. Buddy Poppy sale was held, the annual campaign has received the whole-hearted approval of all our Presidents. Each year thousands of letters of gratitude pour into our State offices and National Headquarters telling of the timely assistance given veterans and families in need. These letters constitute the greatest endorsement the Buddy Poppy sale could possibly have.

On Saturday, our volunteer Buddy Poppy sellers will be stationed throughout the town. Do not wait to be asked to buy a Buddy Poppy, contribute generously, for your dime, your quarter, or your dollar could not possibly bring a greater return.

FLUORIDE DENTAL PROGRAM IN HANCOCK COUNTY

A demonstration program in dental health is being offered the first grade pupils in Hancock County for this school year, by the Hancock County Public Health Council cooperating with the State Department of Health. The program has the approval of the United States Public Health Service and the State Department of Public Instruction. The State Department of Health is furnishing funds to finance the program so it is without charge to the parents.

The funds are available for this work to be performed by your family dentist. It is perfectly all right for children who have dentists outside the county to have the work done by their own dentist and State funds can be used in such instances.

Sodium fluoride when applied to children's teeth will cut tooth decay about 40 per cent. Four treatments, approximately one week apart are given.

Knowing as we do that tooth decay occurs in 98 percent of our children, causing too early loss of both first and permanent teeth, it is wise to do what is possible to prevent this decay. Various studies throughout the country have proved the value of fluorine treatment in lowering tooth decay.

Pupils in the first grade whose first permanent teeth have erupted in the mouth are one of the age groups who profit most from this care.

Hancock County is one of a few counties where this program is being offered and we feel fortunate to be participating in it.

Listed below are the dentists in Hancock County who can offer you this treatment.

MAIN STREET PAVING PROJECT ALL SET TO GO AHEAD

Klemme's Main Street paving project is now all set to begin work.

A meeting of the Town Council was held Monday night on a hearing on the storm sewer which must be installed prior to paving in order to give adequate trainage. There were no objections filed after the attorney had explained the purpose of the storm sewer.

The Town Council expects to get all the preliminary work out of the way this fall. This will include the storm sewer. an extension of the sanitary sewer system to the end of Main street, sewer connections and copper water pipe connections.

The paving contract will be let in December by the State Highway Commission, but the actual work of pouring concrete will be done next spring.

1948 PHEASANT SEASON SET

The State Conservation Commission has set the pheasant season from noon November 11th, through November 30th. Shooting hours are from 12 noon to 4 P. M. each day. Bag limit is two cock birds per day with a possession limit of four after the first day.

The season is ten days longer than in 1947. and the possession limit has been increased from two to four birds. Four additional counties have been added to the open territory. The new counties are Mahaska, Keokuk, Washington, and Muscatine.

The Conservation Commission is again stressing the importance of not shooting hen pheasants, by continuing their 'kill no hens" campaign begun last year.

Hunting Seasons and bag limits previously set by the Conservation Commission are:

Squirrel

September 15th through November 15th, daily bag limit six. possession limit 12.

Rabbit

September 15th through Jan. 31st, daily bag limit 10, no possession limit.

Duck

October 29th through November 27th, bag limit 4 per day, possession limit, after the first day, 8. Duck shooting hours, opening day, noon until 1 hour before sunset, each day thereaftr, one-half hour before sunrise until one hour before sunset.

The Commission has announced that there will be no open season on Hungarian Partridges this year.

The 1948 quail and trapping seasons will be set after the Commission meeting on October 4th.

Avery Sunbeams Meet

The members of the Avery 4-H Sunbeams were very happy to receive their 4-H T shirts at the September 11 meeting held at the home of Mary Ann Blumer. Eleven of the old members enjoyed having present 3 new members, Kay Jacobs, Marlene Blumer and Eunice Helps.

After the business meeting during which we discussed our record books and garments we took to the achievement show, several talks were given. The first talks on the list were "Qualifications For Candidates For Officers" given by the present officers. They are as follows: President, Harriet Ostendorf; Vice President, Betty Ann Kramer; Sec. and Treas., Iris Rosendahl; Historian, Lillian Wille; and Reporter Mary Ann Blumer.

Lois Helps gave an interesting demonstration on "Sprinkling Clothes" and JoAnn Burgess told us how to fold a shirt. A helpful demonstration given by Lois Lowenberg and JoAnn Burgess was "Mending and Repairing."

The Avery Sunbeams invite any girl from 10 to 21 years of age, in Avery Township, to join our 4-H Club. The next meeting will be held in October as a special meeting for new members.

Electric Fences Can Be Very Dangerous Says Wardle

Electric fences can do as much harm as good if they are not selected and used properly, says Norval Wardle, farm safety specialist at Iowa State College. He says never gamble with a homemade fence controller, and to make sure that the equipment is installed correctly with good ground and lightning protection. The amount of current passing through an electric fence can be more than enough for electrocution.

TRIUMP OVER WODEN IN CLOSE BALL GAME 4 TO 3

Klemme Defeated Britt In Extra Inning Game 4 To 2

The Reformed Church soft ball team battled their way through tough competition to win the Hancock County soft ball tournament last week to win top honors and the Championship purse, by defeating a fast Woden team in a final thriller 4 to 3.

In the Championship game Woden took a 2 run lead in the first inning, but the R. C. outfit came back strong in the second inning and piled up 3 runs to take the lead away from Woden. Woden scored another run in the 4th inning to tie up the ball game, but the R. C.s pushed over the winning run in the top of the 7th while Woden, with last chance to bat, went out 1, 2, 3, to end the game.

All of the finalists, R. C., Woden, Klemme and Britt were pretty evenly matched and both games were well played and close.

In the Consolation game between Klemme and Britt, the game was scoreless until the top of the 4th inning when Klemme put across 2 runs. Britt, however, had their last turn at bat and pushed 2 runs over to tie the game, forcing it into 8 innings. Klemme banged out hits that netted them 2 more runs and Britt was unable to score in he bottom of the 8th. Klemme won 4 to 2.

Preliminary:
Klemme 16, Liberty 1
Britt 7. Crystal Lako 6
R. C. 5, Hayfield 2
Woden 22, Garner 5

Semi-Finals:
R. C. 3, Britt 1
Woden 4, Klemme 3

Finals, Consolation.
Klemme 4, Britt 2

Finals: Championship
R. C. 4, Woden 3

There were good crowds at the evening games on Monday and Tuesday, while the Campionship game brought out the biggest crowd of the season.

KLEMME WON MUSIC MOTHERS BENEFIT BALL GAME HERE

Klemme defeated the R. C.'s here Monday night in the Music Mothers Benefit 6 to 2 in a game that was well played by both teams. The R. C.'s were playing without Walt Grieman, regular pitcher who has been ill for several days.

Klemme scored 2 in the 1st, 1 in the 2nd, 2 in the 4th and 1 in the 5th, while the R. C.'s pushed in 1 run each in the 4th and 5th. They threatended to score in several other innings.

There was a large crowd present at the game.

HANCOCK DRAFT BOARD BEGINS WORK AT BRITT

The office will be open every day in the week except Saturday and Sunday. However, on registration dates the office will also be open on Saturday.

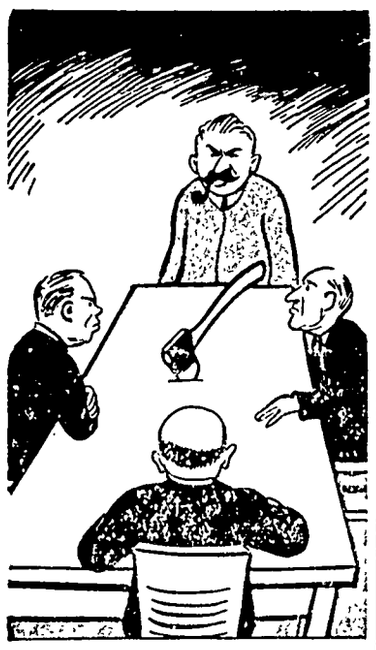
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S.-Russia Events Reach Climax; Moscow Parley Continues Uneasily; Soviets Sever Consular Relations

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Discussion



THE AX WAS THERE

RUSSIANS:
Climactic

Virtually every avenue of public thought in the U S. was teeming with Russians, shadows of Russians and a few Red convertibles.

There was a feeling, however, that the international commotion had reached its climax and was ready to start subsiding, partly because public interest, flagellated into a state of high excitement, couldn't stand the stress and strain of it all much longer

Nevertheless, events having to do with Russia remained for the time being, at least, reasonably climactic: The Moscow talks were ready either to pay off or break down; Russia had broken off consular relations with the U S., Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina, the window-jumping Russian schoolteacher, had told the story of how she had been strong-armed.

Moscow

In the Kremlin, where the three western ambassadors were trying to pound out some kind of tentative basis for negotiations with the Soviet Union, the Russians were playing their familiar game of hit-and-run.

U S. Ambassador Walter Bedell Smith, British Representative Frank Roberts and French Ambassador Yves Chataigneau had been drudging through a series of meetings with the implacable V M Molotov, Soviet foreign minister.

Molotov, as usual, was hard, tough, adamant in his adherence to current Soviet policy on the Berlin and Germany problems. No progress was made: the three western representatives were dispirited, although they kept to their chore The word was whispered about that this conference might break up in total failure

Then came a break, or so it appeared. Premier Stalin would meet again with the three envoys. In the ensuing discussions with Stalin hopes again were raised that the western powers might succeed in at least partially lifting the Berlin blockade and perhaps effect an area of agreement that could be used for a subsequent top-level meeting to iron out some of the major East-West differences.

But there were some who still could see the ax on the peace table. Somehow, there was a familiar pattern behind these negotiations that went something like this:

After Molotov had subjected his fellow conferees to hour after hour of his case-hardened refusals to come to terms, attempting by those tactics to wear his diplomatic opponents down, the scene was set for Stalin's return.

Stalin came on with his air of geniality and good will, apparently not only willing but eager to reach common ground His attitude was so manifestly different from Molotov's that hopes again soared.

There was the danger. Lulled into optimism, the western envoys might be trapped into making concessions that should not be made. This same kind of Molotov-to-Stalin play had worked before

Hit the Road

Jacob M. Lomakin, Soviet consul general in New York, had conducted himself improperly and discreditably in the affair of the Russian schoolteacher, Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina, the U. S. state department pointed out as it ordered him out of the country.

It was a sensational turn of events. In a note to the Soviet embassy the state department asserted that Lomakin had, in effect, misled his own government with regard to the Kasenkina case so that the protests which the Soviets made to the U. S. were "based on misinformation."

In addition, the note charged that the consul general had "hindered the investigation of the competent police officials by refusing to allow them to interview Mrs. Kasenkina" while she was under control of the Soviet consul.

Then, even as Lomakin was packing his bags and preparing to leave the country, Russia countered sharply by formally severing consular relations with the U. S. and repeating its accusations of bad faith.

That seemed to prove that Lomakin's actions in the Kasenkina affair were not so much the expression of his individual initiative as they were a direct reflection of Kremlin policy

However, no one was worrying too much about the breaking off of consular relations. The move did not mean that diplomatic relations were severed.

Soviet consular activities in the U S were limited to arranging for mutual trade and travel between the two nations. Since there is practically no trade or travel exchange taking place, the presence or absence of a consul wouldn't make too much difference.

To Escape

Lying weak and ashen-faced in her hospital bed in New York, Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina finally got around to telling the story of why she leaped from the third-story window of the Soviet consulate.

"I jumped to escape, not to kill myself," she said.

She said that her "rescue" from the Tolstoy foundation's Reed farm was not a "rescue but an arrest," engineered by the Russian consul-general.

She did not want to go back to Russia. Although she loves her people, she stated that "I don't agree with the policies of Josef Stalin. I cannot agree with the regime in the Soviet."

VIEWPOINTS:
Religious

It couldn't be called schismatic: It was thoroughly democratic.

In such a way delegates to the first assembly of the World Council of Churches might have assessed the first two addresses which officially opened the historic sessions in Amsterdam.

John Foster Dulles, U. S. lay leader in many religious activities and internationalist-minded statesman, and Czechoslovakia's Joseph L. Hromadka of the Evangelical Church of Czech Brethren, speaking in a section discussion on "The Church and International Disorder," between them managed to strip much of the camouflage from the growing philosophical and spiritual rift separating the East and West.

Total result of Dulles' and Hromadka's addresses, taken together, was not to presage a religious split between the two blocs of nations but rather to define the problems at the root of current international disorders for those who are courageous enough to attack them with spiritual weapons instead of guns.

DULLES . . . "Peace can never be stabilized except by institutions that seek to reflect moral law and that respect the dignity of the individual. And the present methods of communism are incompatible with peaceful changes.

"Collective action may at times be required, pursuant to the United Nations charter, to protect member states or individual human beings in their charter rights.

"Those who believe in moral law and human dignity must be concerned to make social institutions reflect those ideals."

HROMADKA . . The world is seeing "the end of western supremacy within the realm of international order

"Now, three years after World War II, the western man hasn't yet recovered and is losing more and more the last remnants of his world leadership."

He "hasn't much to offer along the lines of moral, philosophical or spiritual leadership."

OUTPUT:
Upshoot

Total national output of goods and services, stimulated by inflationary forces which have been growing stronger since early summer, hit a record-breaking rate of 248.2 billion dollars in the second quarter of the fiscal year, the commerce department has reported.

That figure is 4.4 billion dollars above the peak reached in the first three months of this year, according to the department.

Watch That Credit

Prospective home buyers who might plunge beyond their means simply because down payments are lower under the new housing law have been warned by government housing experts to avoid that trap.

"Our only worry," one expert said, "is that the lower down payments will encourage people to buy homes they can't afford. When you reduce the down payment, the monthly payments are more."

FUEL OIL:
Plentiful

Last winter's serious fuel shortage in homes and industries probably will not be repeated this year, according to present predictions.

The supply of fuel oil is becoming so plentiful that there apparently is no need for an elaborate distribution system to be set up for the purpose of doling it out.

Stored supplies are 60 per cent ahead of last year at this time and crude runs from distilleries are half a million barrels ahead of a year ago. New refining facilities are largely responsible for eradicating the shortage.

Moreover, oil industry officials say, there now is an ample supply of gasoline. Only thing that could put a crimp in that would be a national emergency or a transportation stoppage.

Most of the major cities are well supplied with oil, and while there might be spot shortages in rural communities during the winter they probably would be only of a day or two duration.

"Last winter," said one industry member, "part of the trouble was caused by snow tying up the railroads." That happens and attention is focused on it when there is an oil shortage. It could happen again.

RADAR NET:
Inadequate

What with one thing and another, Americans can't help now and then wondering what would happen if this country suddenly were to be attacked from the air.

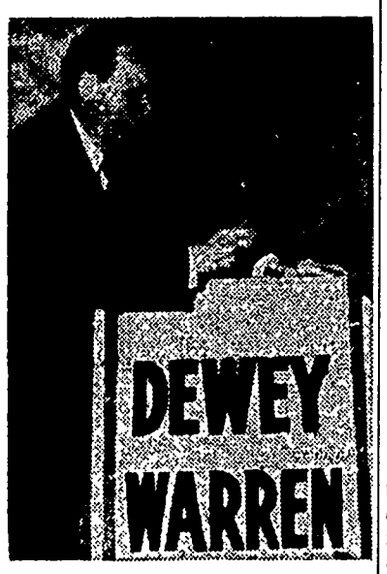
Biggest question in this connection is whether a warning of such an attack would be given in time for the population to evacuate probable centers of attack.

Air force officials say they are doing the best they can with what they have to provide the nation with a radar warning network.

What they have, however, is at best inadequate, they say. The present radar system is not capable of detecting all approaches of foreign planes.

Currently, a committee of leading scientists, headed by Dr. Vannevar Bush, is carrying out a careful study of improvements in radar that could lead to an adequate air warning system.

Political Pounding



Bubbling toothfully with confidence, Herbert Brownell Jr., campaign manager for Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, nails up the sign which proclaims that the Washington, D. C., headquarters for the Republican campaign ticket of Dewey and Warren is open for business. Brownell also has the idea that business will be good.

INSTALLMENTS:
Regulated

Just exactly what effect the newly imposed restrictions on credit buying would have on the hog-wild inflation that has been devastating the nation's moral fiber was not quite clear.

Acting under authorization of the 80th congress, the government put the brakes on installment buying and extended the ceiling on its new regulations to $5,000 to control wildcat buying of expensive new automobiles. This new order goes into effect September 20.

From that day forward the law will require that the buyer of a new car pay one-third down in cash and take not more than 18 months to pay off the balance in installments of not less than $70 a month.

Other hard goods—stoves, refrigerators, washing machines and related household articles—call for a 20 per cent down payment with the balance to be liquidated in not more than 15 months.

The order exempts anything costing less than $50 or more than $5,000—a rule which set many Americans to asking caustically what they could find to buy for less than $50 and where they could get the money to purchase anything over $5,000.

Actually, however, the credit curb seemed to amount to little more than putting the government's stamp of legal approval on a practice which has been followed voluntarily by a considerable number of retail merchants.

Many astute businessmen have been following the one-third down payment rule all along, as a protection both to themselves and the prospective buyers.

Upshot of it all was that few people believed the federal regulation would do much to clear the inflationary atmosphere.

Man Is Riding Life Cycle Toward His Destruction

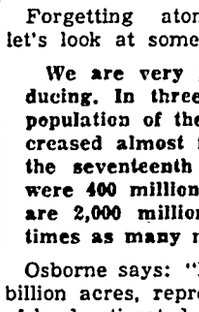
By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator

WASHINGTON.—Today we have two visitors whom I met recently at the Smithsonian institution, Mrs. Neanderthaler (her husband wasn't available) and Mr. Cro-Magnon.

They have come a long way The Neanderthalers lived about 25,000 years ago—but what's a few thousand years among friends—or relatives? I doubt that the Neanderthalers are relatives of ours—and I'm not sorry.

They lived early in the Old Stone age, and died without leaving any known heirs, assigns or descendents—which may be just as well for the rest of us who might have inherited some of their characteristics. They were sub-humans—stocky folks—but they couldn't take it. They died out.

Now Mr. Cro-Magnon was a different proposition. He was a superior human and I wish he were a relative because he was really superior to us—better body, better brain. If he'd only lasted, what a career he would have had in Hollywood—and what he might have done for us! He might have saved us. He may still.



Baukhage

I've been reading two new books—"Our Plundered Planet," by Fairfield Osborne and "Road to Survival," by William Vogt.

Our friend Neanderthaler probably managed to stick around 200,000 years or so before his environment or his neighbors finished him off.

Today we are rapidly changing our environment, and unless we cease destroying our sources of food and shelter, we shall soon destroy ourselves, as our sub-human friend was destroyed.

We know that there are two things which chiefly distinguish man from the animal: The way he has developed the use of his hands and the way his brain works. But our hands, at the levers of machines, conceived by our brains, have so disturbed the cycle of nature, have done such terrible things to all forms of life, that they may prove our undoing—if they don't blow us into atomic eternity, first!

Forgetting atomic destruction, let's look at some others.

We are very good at reproducing. In three centuries the population of the earth has increased almost five times. In the seventeenth century there were 400 million people. There are 2,000 million today. Five times as many mouths to feed.

Osborne says: "If one takes four billion acres, representing an area of land estimated as now available for cultivation, it means that there are less than two acres per capita Contrasted with this is a generally accepted computation that two and one-half acres of land of average productivity are required to provide even a minimum adequate diet for each person."

Think of that: It takes two and one-half acres to feed you properly. There are now only two acres available. So you can see why there are such food shortages around the world.

MRS. NEANDERTHALER
. . . they couldn't take it . . .

Osborne goes on: "The relation between land-health and health of human beings is actually no more than a delicate aspect of the delicate complex aspect of all life."

The cycle of life—the life in the soil that feeds and clothes our own life—is a part of the single whole which contributes to the fruitfulness of the earth.

I haven't space here to go through the whole list of crimes that man has committed in the race to break that cycle—to destroy the fruitfulness of the earth—that fruitfulness upon which his own existence depends. Take the most striking example—the topsoil.

Topsoil. When that goes, we go with it.

Osborne, as I mentioned in this space last week, estimates the average depth of the topsoil on the earth is about one foot It is estimated that it takes nature, under favorable conditions, from 300 to 1,000 years to build one inch of that vital source of our food, clothing and shelter

"Yet," he says, "what may have taken a thousand years to build can be, and in some places has been, removed by erosion in a year, or even in a single day"

Erosion That comes from overuse, wrong use or removal of protecting grasses and trees We overgrazed the plains to get quick money for beef, mutton and wool We plowed fields of grass, left them exposed, and you remember what happened—the dust bowl We slaughtered the forests and reaped the yearly devastating floods. Today our food and shelter runs down the muddied rivers to be lost in the ocean

And animal life? We killed off millions of wild animals on this continent. We replaced them, to some extent, by domestic animals. But we are breaking the magic cycle of life there, too, for the life-giving properties of most of our domestic animals do not return to the soil as did the bones and bodies of wild life that lived their course, died and were enveloped in their mother earth.

Sheep and cattle are shipped today to slaughter houses where what little is left disappears in disposal plants or goes back to the ocean.

MR. CRO-MAGNON
. . . spark of something else . . .

We are killing the soil. Gradually removing it and the tiny animal and plant cells it contains, and thus destroying the potential for reproducing the tiny living organisms in the top soil which are a part of the relationship of all living things.

I haven't space to go on, but I don't want to leave on a too-depressing note. It's true that our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Neanderthaler, the sub-human folk with the little brain, couldn't take it But we can hope that his successor, Mr. Cro-Magnon, who had a better brain than we have, passed some of it on to us, with the spark of something else that made him lift his chin a little from the clod

"We have been taught to lift ours higher, to the heavens. There's hope up there- and inspiration--and within ourselves the power, too, if we know how to use it.

More Trees On the Way

American farmers will have more trees to plant next year than ever before in our history.

State nurseries plan to grow 368,976,551 in 1947-48, according to a national survey just completed by the American Forest Products Industries, Inc., of Washington, D C.

Most of these trees will be sold to farmers and other landowners at cost, while many will be given to farmers free of charge by forest industries who purchase them from state nurseries.

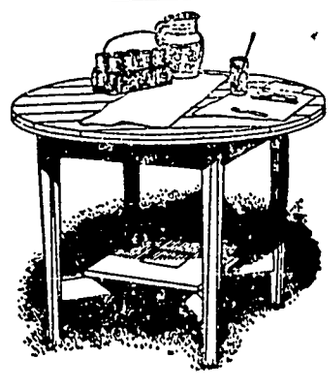
This forest seedling production, however, will be increased substantially by federal and private industry nurseries over the United States, pushing the total to approximately 400 million seedlings.

Yet these figures, representing the planting of three trees for every man, woman and child in the country, indicate statistically that seedling production still is not enough to fill the demand by woodland owners and other citizens interested in growing trees.

And while they still do not meet the tremendous demand, if all these seedlings were planted 1,000 to an acre they would form a verdant, mile-wide belt stretching from New York to Chicago.

The record in tree planting is matched only by the volume of new wood now growing on America's forest lands. Total growth now exceeds 13.3 billion cubic feet of wood every year—greatest volume ever recorded in surveys made by the federal government.

Lawn Furniture Can Be Made at Very Low Cost



MAKE your porch, terrace or lawn an outdoor living room . . . turn your backyard into a picnic ground. You'll be agreeably surprised to see what fun dining out can be. Food takes on an added zest when flavored with the thrill of a picnic

You can build wonderful pieces of lawn furniture at very low cost. The set illustrated above was built from patterns. These patterns take all the mystery out of woodworking Each shows the full size, shape and length for cutting each part Wherever two parts are fastened together, the exact location is indicated on the pattern Step by step directions explain every part of construction in easy to understand language.

by GRANTLAND RICE

"THESE next Olympic games will be just about the same as the others." Dean Cromwell was speaking at the University of California track last winter. "They don't change too much."

"Why should it be that way?" I asked our Olympic coach.

"Too many fine, natural athletes," he said. "Too many able coaches and trainers all over the map. Our track-and-field athletes get the best training and coaching in the world—and I'm not talking about myself. We can't miss."

Grantland Rice

The genial Dean Cromwell was right again. But, before taking too many bows, don't forget we faced a war-wrecked world that wasn't very well fed. Also, we had one of the strongest teams that ever entered an Olympic meet since Pindar sang of Grecian glory a few thousand years ago.

This was a star United States team that couldn't be approached. But despite better food and better training, it was none too keen about any races beyond half a mile or 800 meters. The U. S. had the call in speed. Europe had the call in stamina.

I asked Cromwell why it was that U. S. athletes couldn't handle distance races.

"We are a nation of quick reactions," he said. "We can't wait. Our favorite race is the 100-yard dash—or the 100 meters. Our next favorite race is the 200 meters. After the mile we have little interest. We have few athletes willing to train that long and that hard.

"We can't get athletes who really will train for the 5,000 and 10,000-meter races. Maybe they wouldn't be so good if they did. It takes more than one generation to make a 10,000-meter or a marathon winner."

Are Americans Soft?

"You mean we can't take the beating," I said. "We want the softer road."

"It isn't quite that," Cromwell said, as he squirmed and twisted a trifle. "We are just not a nation of long-distance runners, from the mile on up."

"Yet the mile race is the greatest of them all," I said.

"Who said so?" Cromwell asked. "What are you—a Swede or a Finn?"

"We've had some great milers," Cromwell said. "Glenn Cunningham and Bill Bonthron."

"What about Jack Lovelock?" I suggested. "Yards beyond them all at the mile or 1,500 meters. What about Gunder Haegg, the Swede, yards better than Lovelock? What about other Swedes, many yards beyond the best we've ever had?"

"Let's get back to the field events," Cromwell said.

The main weakness in U. S. entries is the matter of stamina. Over here we want results and applause in a hurry. We can't wait.

Johnny Hayes won the marathon in England exactly 40 years ago, in 1908. Hayes beat Dorando, the Italian, who was carried across the line. But Dorando came over here and whipped Hayes.

Let's be honest. We are not a marathon people. We are not even mile people. We never have had anyone to compare with Paavo Nurmi, Lovelock, Haegg and others who could run rings around the best we ever had at a mile. Cunningham, Bonthron and others, plus Gil Dodds, made gallant gestures in the right direction. But they were not 4.01 or 4.02 milers on an outdoor track.

Lovelock Eases Along

I feel confident that Lovelock could have taken at least two seconds from the 1,500 race in Berlin. He was merely galloping when he finished in 3 minutes, 47 and 8/10 seconds.

"I wasn't interested in time," Lovelock said later. "I merely wanted to win comfortably." Even then he had only broken the Olympic record by 4 seconds. I feel sure Lovelock could have run the 1,500 meters in 3 minutes and 45 seconds—or the mile in 4.01.

In any Olympic game, or any set of track-and-field games, the dullest sports are the jumps, the shot put, the hammer throw, the long, drawn-out pole vault. For some reason we have picked the dullest sports in which to excel. No one cares very much whether you finish first or last. The weight events are the dullest of them all.

I don't believe all Olympic events should be judged on the same basis. The marathon should be worth 30 points, compared to 5 points for the 100 meters. The 10,000-meter race should be worth 20 points, with 10 points for the 200-meter race. I still believe that stamina is more important than speed—that hardihood is more important than flash courage.

Things I Never Knew 'Til Now
(Because the teachers were too pretty)

That Shakespeare's most loquacious character was Hamlet, to whom he gave 1,569 speaking lines. (Showing off again that he can read!)

That in Indianapolis, Ind., it's illegal for a mustached man to kiss anyone. (Mustache my lawyer about that!)

That Oscar Wilde's full name was Oscar Fingal O'Flahertie Wills Wilde. (They called him "Whoopsss!" for short.)

That according to the department of commerce the American public spends 400 million dollars a year on restaurant tips.

That the brain isn't mentioned in the Bible. (Now he's trying to tell us he reads the Bible!)

That in West Cork, Ireland, relief clients who are toothless and unable to chew the free beef are given whisky instead. (Mebbe that's why they say Ireland is "a little bit of heaven.")

That when someone once asked Heywood Broun what was the most important qualification for a columnist he replied: "To own a waste basket." (You're telling me!)

That you can forecast the weather yourself by observing the change in the wind's direction. (If the change is in a clockwise direction, the weather will improve. If it's counter-clockwise, carry your umbrella!)

That Dante, the Italian poet who wrote "The Divine Comedy," trained his pet cat to sit on a table and hold a burning candle in its paws while he read. (It must have been the cats!)

That a woman's brain is 140 grams lighter than a man's. (So will you kindly keep still and listen?)

That the reason "Q" is the only letter omitted from the telephone dial is because it would look so much like "O" that people would be confused and dial wrong numbers. (And I do mean Q!)

That the Michigan State college curriculum now includes a course for blacksmiths. (Shoe 'nuff!)

That you weigh more in an elevator when it is going up. (Is there anything that man doesn't know?)

That if you have trouble loosening tight screws and bolts, a few drops of peroxide will do the trick. (Ask me anything!)

That the color ink you use is supposed to be a clue to your character. Black ink shows sound opinions—blue ink, a happy balance between intellect and sentimentality — violet ink, impulsiveness and choleric temperament—and red ink reveals obstinacy, quarrelsomeness and a tendency to dominate others. (It also shows that business isn't so good.)

That if prisoners in Mexico City are married, they may receive overnight visits from their wives and are given special quarters away from the cell block. (Latins are so romantic!)

That a Hindu trick for wooing slumber is to close the eyes and concentrate on looking inward toward the nose—supposed to put you to sleep in less than two minutes. (Who'll count my sheep for me while I'm fooling around with Hindu tricks?)

That when Mrs. Harry S. Truman attended the Barstow School for Girls she excelled in the shotput. (Hmmm, so that's where Margaret inherited her talent!)

That almost four times as much aspirin is used today as in 1929—10 million pounds instead of 1929's 2,500,000. (Some fun, eh, kid?)

That more U. S. Presidents have died in July than any other month, and that no President ever died in May. (Seven died in July, including John Adams, Thomas Jefferson and James Monroe.)

That a popular misconception is that Big Ben is the name of the clock on the House of Parliament in London. (It's not—it's the name of the bell that strikes the hour.)

That according to a Smithsonian anthropologist, the cave man's ideal femme measured the same in all three directions. (Every man to his own taste!)

That geologists predict Niagara falls will cease to exist by 22000 A. D., because they're continually retreating. (Gosh you'd better hurry up and see them!)

That giraffes in captivity have an intense dislike for women. (The big dopes!)

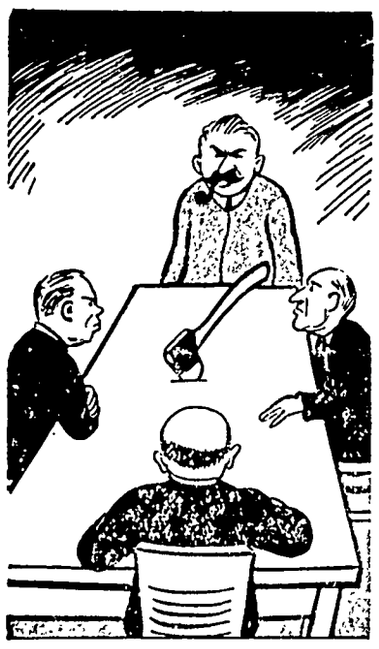
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S.-Russia Events Reach Climax; Moscow Parley Continues Uneasily; Soviets Sever Consular Relations

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Discussion



THE AX WAS THERE

RUSSIANS:
Climactic

Virtually every avenue of public thought in the U S was teeming with Russians, shadows of Russians and a few Red convertibles.

There was a feeling, however, that the international commotion had reached its climax and was ready to start subsiding, partly because public interest, flagellated into a state of high excitement, couldn't stand the stress and strain of it all much longer

Nevertheless, events having to do with Russia remained for the time being, at least, reasonably climactic The Moscow talks were ready either to pay off or break down; Russia had broken off consular relations with the U S.; Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina, the window-jumping Russian schoolteacher, had told the story of how she had been strong-armed.

Moscow

In the Kremlin, where the three western ambassadors were trying to pound out some kind of tentative basis for negotiations with the Soviet Union, the Russians were playing their familiar game of hit-and-run.

U S. Ambassador Walter Bedell Smith, British Representative Frank Roberts and French Ambassador Yves Chataigneau had been drudging through a series of meetings with the implacable V M. Molotov, Soviet foreign minister.

Molotov, as usual, was hard, tough, adamant in his adherence to current Soviet policy on the Berlin and Germany problems. No progress was made: the three western representatives were dispirited, although they kept to their chore. The word was whispered about that this conference might break up in total failure.

Then came a break, or so it appeared. Premier Stalin would meet again with the three envoys. In the ensuing discussions with Stalin hopes again were raised that the western powers might succeed in at least partially lifting the Berlin blockade and perhaps effect an area of agreement that could be used for a subsequent top-level meeting to iron out some of the major East-West differences.

But there were some who still could see the ax on the peace table. Somehow, there was a familiar pattern behind these negotiations that went something like this:

After Molotov had subjected his fellow conferees to hour after hour of his case hardened refusals to come to terms, attempting by those tactics to wear his diplomatic opponents down, the scene was set for Stalin's return.

Stalin came on with his air of geniality and good will, apparently not only willing but eager to reach common ground His attitude was so manifestly different from Molotov's that hopes again soared.

There was the danger. Lulled into optimism, the western envoys might be trapped into making concessions that should not be made This same kind of Molotov-to-Stalin play had worked before.

Hit the Road

Jacob M. Lomakin, Soviet consul general in New York, had conducted himself improperly and discreditably in the affair of the Russian schoolteacher, Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina, the U. S. state department pointed out as it ordered him out of the country.

It was a sensational turn of events. In a note to the Soviet embassy the state department asserted that Lomakin had, in effect, misled his own government with regard to the Kasenkina case so that the protests which the Soviets made to the U. S. were "based on misinformation."

In addition, the note charged that the consul general had "hindered the investigation of the competent police officials by refusing to allow them to interview Mrs. Kasenkina" while she was under control of the Soviet consul.

Then, even as Lomakin was packing his bags and preparing to leave the country, Russia countered sharply by formally severing consular relations with the U. S. and repeating its accusations of bad faith.

That seemed to prove that Lomakin's actions in the Kasenkina affair were not so much the expression of his individual initiative as they were a direct reflection of Kremlin policy

However, no one was worrying too much about the breaking off of consular relations The move did not mean that diplomatic relations were severed.

Soviet consular activities in the U S were limited to arranging for mutual trade and travel between the two nations. Since there is practically no trade or travel exchange taking place, the presence or absence of a consul wouldn't make too much difference.

To Escape

Lying weak and ashen-faced in her hospital bed in New York, Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina finally got around to telling the story of why she leaped from the third-story window of the Soviet consulate.

"I jumped to escape, not to kill myself," she said.

She said that her "rescue" from the Tolstoy foundation's Reed farm was not a "rescue but an arrest," engineered by the Russian consul-general.

She did not want to go back to Russia. Although she loves her people, she stated that "I don't agree with the policies of Josef Stalin. I cannot agree with the regime in the Soviet."

VIEWPOINTS:
Religious

It couldn't be called schismatic: It was thoroughly democratic.

In such a way delegates to the first assembly of the World Council of Churches might have assessed the first two addresses which officially opened the historic sessions in Amsterdam

John Foster Dulles, U. S. lay leader in many religious activities and internationalist-minded statesman, and Czechoslovakia's Joseph L. Hromadka of the Evangelical Church of Czech Brethren, speaking in a section discussion on "The Church and International Disorder," between them managed to strip much of the camouflage from the growing philosophical and spiritual rift separating the East and West.

Total result of Dulles' and Hromadka's addresses, taken together, was not to presage a religious split between the two blocs of nations but rather to define the problems at the root of current international disorders for those who are courageous enough to attack them with spiritual weapons instead of guns.

DULLES . . . "Peace can never be stabilized except by institutions that seek to reflect moral law and that respect the dignity of the individual. And the present methods of communism are incompatible with peaceful changes.

"Collective action may at times be required, pursuant to the United Nations charter, to protect member states or individual human beings in their charter rights.

"Those who believe in moral law and human dignity must be concerned to make social institutions reflect those ideals."

HROMADKA The world is seeing "the end of western supremacy within the realm of international order

"Now, three years after World War II, the western man hasn't yet recovered and is losing more and more the last remnants of his world leadership."

He "hasn't much to offer along the lines of moral, philosophical or spiritual leadership."

OUTPUT:
Upshoot

Total national output of goods and services, stimulated by inflationary forces which have been growing stronger since early summer, hit a record-breaking rate of 248.2 billion dollars in the second quarter of the fiscal year, the commerce department has reported.

That figure is 4.4 billion dollars above the peak reached in the first three months of this year, according to the department.

Watch That Credit

Prospective home buyers who might plunge beyond their means simply because down payments are lower under the new housing law have been warned by government housing experts to avoid that trap.

"Our only worry," one expert said, "is that the lower down payments will encourage people to buy homes they can't afford. When you reduce the down payment, the monthly payments are more."

FUEL OIL:
Plentiful

Last winter's serious fuel shortage in homes and industries probably will not be repeated this year, according to present predictions.

The supply of fuel oil is becoming so plentiful that there apparently is no need for an elaborate distribution system to be set up for the purpose of doling it out.

Stored supplies are 60 per cent ahead of last year at this time and crude runs from distilleries are half a million barrels ahead of a year ago. New refining facilities are largely responsible for eradicating the shortage.

Moreover, oil industry officials say, there now is an ample supply of gasoline. Only thing that could put a crimp in that would be a national emergency or a transportation stoppage.

Most of the major cities are well supplied with oil, and while there might be spot shortages in rural communities during the winter they probably would be only of a day or two duration.

"Last winter," said one industry member, "part of the trouble was caused by snow tying up the railroads." That happens and attention is focused on it when there is an oil shortage. It could happen again.

RADAR NET:
Inadequate

What with one thing and another, Americans can't help now and then wondering what would happen if this country suddenly were to be attacked from the air.

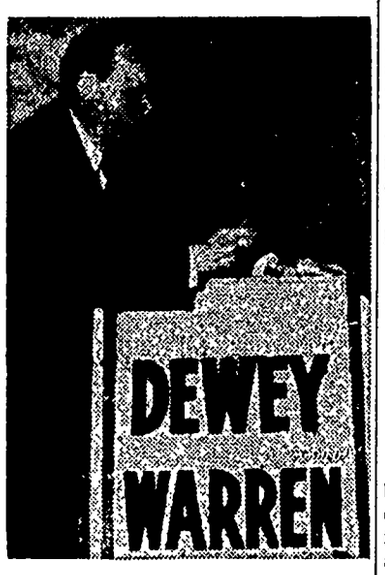
Biggest question in this connection is whether a warning of such an attack would be given in time for the population to evacuate probable centers of attack.

Air force officials say they are doing the best they can with what they have to provide the nation with a radar warning network.

What they have, however, is at best inadequate, they say. The present radar system is not capable of detecting all approaches of foreign planes.

Currently, a committee of leading scientists, headed by Dr. Vannevar Bush, is carrying out a careful study of improvements in radar that could lead to an adequate air warning system.

Political Pounding



Bubbling toothfully with confidence, Herbert Brownell Jr., campaign manager for Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, nails up the sign which proclaims that the Washington, D. C., headquarters for the Republican campaign ticket of Dewey and Warren is open for business. Brownell also has the idea that business will be good.

INSTALLMENTS:
Regulated

Just exactly what effect the newly imposed restrictions on credit buying would have on the hog-wild inflation that has been devastating the nation's moral fiber was not quite clear.

Acting under authorization of the 80th congress, the government put the brakes on installment buying and extended the ceiling on its new regulations to $5,000 to control wildcat buying of expensive new automobiles. This new order goes into effect September 20.

From that day forward the law will require that the buyer of a new car pay one-third down in cash and take not more than 18 months to pay off the balance in installments of not less than $70 a month.

Other hard goods—stoves, refrigerators, washing machines and related household articles—call for a 20 per cent down payment with the balance to be liquidated in not more than 15 months.

The order exempts anything costing less than $50 or more than $5,000—a rule which set many Americans to asking caustically what they could find to buy for less than $50 and where they could get the money to purchase anything over $5,000.

Actually, however, the credit curb seemed to amount to little more than putting the government's stamp of legal approval on a practice which has been followed voluntarily by a considerable number of retail merchants.

Many astute businessmen have been following the one-third down payment rule all along, as a protection both to themselves and the prospective buyers.

Upshot of it all was that few people believed the federal regulation would do much to clear the inflationary atmosphere.

Man Is Riding Life Cycle Toward His Destruction

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Today we have two visitors whom I met recently at the Smithsonian institution, Mrs. Neanderthaler (her husband wasn't available) and Mr. Cro-Magnon.

They have come a long way. The Neanderthalers lived about 25,000 years ago—but what's a few thousand years among friends—or relatives? I doubt that the Neanderthalers are relatives of ours—and I'm not sorry.

They lived early in the Old Stone age, and died without leaving any known heirs, assigns or descendents—which may be just as well for the rest of us who might have inherited some of their characteristics. They were sub-humans—stocky folks—but they couldn't take it. They died out.

Now Mr. Cro-Magnon was a different proposition He was a superior human and I wish he were a relative because he was really superior to us—better body, better brain. If he'd only lasted, what a career he would have had in Hollywood—and what he might have done for us! He might have saved us. He may still.

Baukhage

I've been reading two new books—"Our Plundered Planet," by Fairfield Osborne and "Road to Survival," by William Vogt.

Our friend Neanderthaler probably managed to stick around 200,000 years or so before his environment or his neighbors finished him off.

Today we are rapidly changing our environment, and unless we cease destroying our sources of food and shelter, we shall soon destroy ourselves, as our sub-human friend was destroyed.

We know that there are two things which chiefly distinguish man from the animal: The way he has developed the use of his hands and the way his brain works. But our hands, at the levers of machines, conceived by our brains, have so disturbed the cycle of nature, have done such terrible things to all forms of life, that they may prove our undoing—if they don't blow us into atomic eternity, first!

Forgetting atomic destruction, let's look at some others.

We are very good at reproducing. In three centuries the population of the earth has increased almost five times. In the seventeenth century there were 400 million people. There are 2,000 million today. Five times as many mouths to feed.

Osborne says: "If one takes four billion acres, representing an area of land estimated as now available for cultivation, it means that there are less than two acres per capita Contrasted with this is a generally accepted computation that two and one-half acres of land of average productivity are required to provide even a minimum adequate diet for each person."

Think of that: It takes two and one-half acres to feed you properly. There are now only two acres available. So you can see why there are such food shortages around the world.

. . . they couldn't take it . . .

Osborne goes on: "The relation between land-health and health of human beings is actually no more than a delicate aspect of the delicate complex aspect of all life."

The cycle of life—the life in the soil that feeds I clothes our own life—is a part of the single whole which contributes to the fruitfulness of the earth.

I haven't space here to go through the whole list of crimes that man has committed in the race to break that cycle—to destroy the fruitfulness of the earth—that fruitfulness upon which his own existence depends. Take the most striking example—the topsoil.

Topsoil. When that goes, we go with it.

Osborne, as I mentioned in this space last week, estimates the average depth of the topsoil on the earth is about one foot. It is estimated that it takes nature, under favorable conditions, from 300 to 1,000 years to build one inch of that vital source of our food, clothing and shelter

"Yet," he says, "what may have taken a thousand years to build can be, and in some places has been, removed by erosion in a year, or even in a single day."

Erosion That comes from overuse, wrong use or removal of protecting grasses and trees. We overgrazed the plains to get quick money for beef, mutton and wool We plowed fields of grass, left them exposed, and you remember what happened—the dust bowl. We slaughtered the forests and reaped the yearly devastating floods. Today our food and shelter runs down the muddied rivers to be lost in the ocean

And animal life? We killed off millions of wild animals on this continent. We replaced them, to some extent, by domestic animals. But we are breaking the magic cycle of life there, too, for the life-giving properties of most of our domestic animals do not return to the soil as did the bones and bodies of wild life that lived their course, died and were enveloped in their mother earth.

Sheep and cattle are shipped today to slaughter houses where what little is left disappears in disposal plants or goes back to the ocean

. . . spark of something else . . .

We are killing the soil. Gradually removing it and the tiny animal and plant cells it contains, and thus destroying the potential for reproducing the tiny living organisms in the top soil which are a part of the relationship of all living things.

I haven't space to go on, but I don't want to leave on a too-depressing note. It's true that our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Neanderthaler, the sub-human folk with the little brain, couldn't take it. But we can hope that his successor, Mr. Cro-Magnon, who had a better brain than we have, passed some of it on to us, with the spark of something else that made him lift his chin a little from the clod

"We have been taught to lift ours higher, to the heavens There's hope up there- and inspiration--and within ourselves the power, too, if we know how to use it.

More Trees On the Way

American farmers will have more trees to plant next year than ever before in our history.

State nurseries plan to grow 368,976,551 in 1947-48, according to a national survey just completed by the American Forest Products Industries, Inc., of Washington, D C.

Most of these trees will be sold to farmers and other landowners at cost, while many will be given to farmers free of charge by forest industries who purchase them from state nurseries.

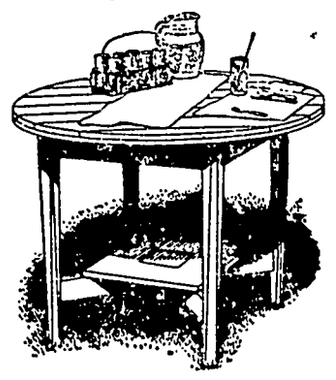
This forest seedling production, however, will be increased substantially by federal and private industry nurseries over the United States, pushing the total to approximately 400 million seedlings.

Yet these figures, representing the planting of three trees for every man, woman and child in the country, indicate statistically that seedling production still is not enough to fill the demand by woodland owners and other citizens interested in growing trees.

And while they still do not meet the tremendous demand, if all these seedlings were planted 1,000 to an acre they would form a verdant, mile-wide belt stretching from New York to Chicago.

The record in tree planting is matched only by the volume of new wood now growing on America's forest lands. Total growth now exceeds 13.3 billion cubic feet of wood every year—greatest volume ever recorded in surveys made by the federal government.

Lawn Furniture Can Be Made at Very Low Cost



MAKE your porch, terrace or lawn an outdoor living room . . . turn your backyard into a picnic ground You'll be agreeably surprised to see what fun dining out can be. Food takes on an added zest when flavored with the thrill of a picnic.

You can build wonderful pieces of lawn furniture at very low cost. The set illustrated above was built from patterns. These patterns take all the mystery out of woodworking Each shows the full size, shape and length for cutting each part. Wherever two parts are fastened together, the exact location is indicated on the pattern. Step by step directions explain every part of construction in easy to understand language.

by Grantland Rice

"THESE next Olympic games will be just about the same as the others." Dean Cromwell was speaking at the University of California track last winter. "They don't change too much."

"Why should it be that way?" I asked our Olympic coach.

"Too many fine, natural athletes," he said. "Too many able coaches and trainers all over the map. Our track-and-field athletes get the best training and coaching in the world—and I'm not talking about myself. We can't miss."

Grantland Rice

The genial Dean Cromwell was right again. But, before taking too many bows, don't forget we faced a war-wrecked world that wasn't very well fed. Also, we had one of the strongest teams that ever entered an Olympic meet since Pindar sang of Grecian glory a few thousand years ago.

This was a star United States team that couldn't be approached. But despite better food and better training, it was none too keen about any races beyond half a mile or 800 meters. The U. S. had the call in speed. Europe had the call in stamina.

I asked Cromwell why it was that U. S. athletes couldn't handle distance races.

"We are a nation of quick reactions," he said. "We can't wait. Our favorite race is the 100-yard dash—or the 100 meters. Our next favorite race is the 200 meters. After the mile we have little interest. We have few athletes willing to train that long and that hard.

"We can't get athletes who really will train for the 5,000 and 10,000-meter races. Maybe they wouldn't be so good if they did. It takes more than one generation to make a 10,000-meter or a marathon winner."

Are Americans Soft?

"You mean we can't take the beating," I said. "We want the softer road."

"It isn't quite that," Cromwell said, as he squirmed and twisted a trifle. "We are just not a nation of long-distance runners, from the mile on up."

"Yet the mile race is the greatest of them all," I said.

"Who said so?" Cromwell asked. "What are you—a Swede or a Finn?"

"We've had some great milers," Cromwell said. "Glenn Cunningham and Bill Bonthron."

"What about Jack Lovelock?" I suggested. "Yards beyond them all at the mile or 1,500 meters. What about Gunder Haegg, the Swede, yards better than Lovelock? What about other Swedes, many yards beyond the best we've ever had?"

"Let's get back to the field events," Cromwell said.

The main weakness in U. S. entries is the matter of stamina. Over here we want results and applause in a hurry. We can't wait.

Johnny Hayes won the marathon in England exactly 40 years ago, in 1908. Hayes beat Dorando, the Italian, who was carried across the line. But Dorando came over here and whipped Hayes.

Let's be honest. We are not a marathon people. We are not even mile people. We never have had anyone to compare with Paavo Nurmi, Lovelock, Haegg and others who could run rings around the best we ever had at a mile. Cunningham, Bonthron and others, plus Gil Dodds, made gallant gestures in the right direction. But they were not 4.01 or 4.02 milers on an outdoor track.

Lovelock Eases Along

I feel confident that Lovelock could have taken at least two seconds from the 1,500 race in Berlin. He was merely galloping when he finished in 3 minutes, 47 and 8/10 seconds.

"I wasn't interested in time," Lovelock said later. "I merely wanted to win comfortably." Even then he had only broken the Olympic record by 4 seconds. I feel sure Lovelock could have run the 1,500 meters in 3 minutes and 45 seconds—or the mile in 4.01.

In any Olympic game, or any set of track-and-field games, the dullest sports are the jumps, the shot put, the hammer throw, the long, drawn-out pole vault. For some reason we have picked the dullest sports in which to excel. No one cares very much whether you finish first or last. The weight events are the dullest of them all.

I don't believe all Olympic events should be judged on the same basis. The marathon should be worth 30 points, compared to 5 points for the 100 meters. The 10,000-meter race should be worth 20 points, with 10 points for the 200-meter race. I still believe that stamina is more important than speed—that hardihood is more important than flash courage.

Things I Never Knew 'Til Now
(Because the teachers were too pretty)

That Shakespeare's most loquacious character was Hamlet, to whom he gave 1,569 speaking lines. (Showing off again that he can read!)

That in Indianapolis, Ind., it's illegal for a mustached man to kiss anyone. (Mustache my lawyer about that!)

That Oscar Wilde's full name was Oscar Fingal O'Flahertie Wills Wilde. (They called him "Whoopsss!" for short.)

That according to the department of commerce the American public spends 400 million dollars a year on restaurant tips.

That the brain isn't mentioned in the Bible. (Now he's trying to tell us he reads the Bible!)

That in West Cork, Ireland, relief clients who are toothless and unable to chew the free beef are given whisky instead. (Mebbe that's why they say Ireland is "a little bit of heaven.")

That when someone once asked Heywood Broun what was the most important qualification for a columnist he replied: "To own a waste basket." (You're telling me!)

That you can forecast the weather yourself by observing the change in the wind's direction.

(If the change is in a clockwise direction, the weather will improve. If it's counter-clockwise, carry your umbrella!)

That Dante, the Italian poet who wrote "The Divine Comedy," trained his pet cat to sit on a table and hold a burning candle in its paws while he read. (It must have been the cats!)

That a woman's brain is 140 grams lighter than a man's. (So will you kindly keep still and listen?)

That the reason "Q" is the only letter omitted from the telephone dial is because it would look so much like "O" that people would be confused and dial wrong numbers. (And I do mean Q!)

That the Michigan State college curriculum now includes a course for blacksmiths. (Shoe 'nuff!)

That you weigh more in an elevator when it is going up. (Is there anything that man doesn't know?)

That if you have trouble loosening tight screws and bolts, a few drops of peroxide will do the trick. (Ask me anything!)

That the color ink you use is supposed to be a clue to your character. Black ink shows sound opinions—blue ink, a happy balance between intellect and sentimentality — violet ink, impulsiveness and choleric temperament—and red ink reveals obstinacy, quarrelsomeness and a tendency to dominate others. (It also shows that business isn't so good.)

That if prisoners in Mexico City are married, they may receive overnight visits from their wives and are given special quarters away from the cell block. (Latins are so romantic!)

That a Hindu trick for wooing slumber is to close the eyes and concentrate on looking inward toward the nose—supposed to put you to sleep in less than two minutes. (Who'll count my sheep for me while I'm fooling around with Hindu tricks?)

That when Mrs. Harry S. Truman attended the Barstow School for Girls she excelled in the shotput. (Hmmm, so that's where Margaret inherited her talent!)

That almost four times as much aspirin is used today as in 1929—10 million pounds instead of 1929's 2,500,000. (Some fun, eh, kid?)

That more U. S. Presidents have died in July than any other month, and that no President ever died in May. (Seven died in July, including John Adams, Thomas Jefferson and James Monroe.)

That a popular misconception is that Big Ben is the name of the clock on the House of Parliament in London. (It's not—it's the name of the bell that strikes the hour.)

That according to a Smithsonian anthropologist, the cave man's ideal femme measured the same in all three directions.

(Every man to his own taste!)

That geologists predict Niagara falls will cease to exist by 22000 A. D., because they're continually retreating. (Gosh you'd better hurry up and see them!)

That giraffes in captivity have an intense dislike for women.

(The big dopes!)

Bakery Products
ARE STILL ONE OF YOUR MOST ECONOMICAL FOODS
Department of Labor statistics on living costs published in the newspapers last month show that the price of all foods rose from 95.8 in August, 1939, to 213.9 in June, 1948.

During this same period, baked goods rose in price from 96.6 to 169.1. Garner Bakery products are 15.0 below this figure.

Compare these figures! Then when you are inclilned to talk about the high prices of bakery products. just stop and remember that bakery products haven't gone up in price anything like the amount that food prices generally have risen . . . or that the prices of many of the ingredients used in baked goods have increased.

Today bakery products are still, as they always have been, one of your best "buys" from an economical as well as a nutritious standpoint. And they are delicious too, especially when you buy them as oven-fresh as they are when you buy them from us.

HANCOCK COUNTY BOARD PROCEEDINGS

11TH ADJOURNED JUNE MEETING
Garner, Iowa
September 2, 1948

The Hancock County, Iowa Board of Supervisors met in session on above captioned date pursuant to adjournment with John Chambers, George Th. Gerdes and F. J. Schoun present.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved as read.

Supervisor Gerdes is appointed a committee to investigate and cause repairs to be made in D. D. No. 46-3.

On motion and second the Boiler Inspection Report for the Hancock County Courthouse is hereby approved.

This being the 2nd day of September, 1948, a date heretofore set for a hearing on the report of C. F. Merten, Engineer recommending that the contracts of Schram Brothers of Titonka, Iowa, for labor on D. D. No. 101; D. D. No. 122; D. D. No. 144; and D. D. No. 145, be accepted as completed and final estimate in the sum of $290.93 for D. D. No. 101; $197.56 for D. D. No. 122; $1,076.39 for D. D. No. 144; and $1,884.95 for D. D. No. 145, be paid, the hour for said hearing having arrived and the Board being fully advised said hearing was held as scheduled.

No objectors appeared.

BE AND IT IS THEREFORE RESOLVED by the Board of Supervisors acting for and in behalf of D. D. No. 101 D. D. No. 122, D. D. No. 144, and D. D. No. 145, that the report of the Engineer recommending a final payment on the contract with Schram Brothers of Titonka, Iowa, for labor on said Drainage Districts 101, 122, 144 and 145 be approved, is approved and final estimate ordered paid as by law directed.

BE IT RESOLVED THAT the claims hereinafter set out be allowed in amounts designated thereon and the County Auditor bo and he is hereby authorized and directed to draw warrants on the several funds of Hancock County, Iowa, in payment of such claims in amounts set opposite each claim.

12TH ADJOURNED JUNE MEETING
Garner, Iowa
Sept. 7, 1948

The Hancock County, Iowa Board of Supervisors met in session on above captioned date pursuant to adjournament with George Th. Gerdes, F. J. Schoun, and John Chambers present.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved as read.

Supervisor Chambers is appointed a committee to investigate and cause repairs to be made in D. D. No. 1 and 2, L No. 17.

On motion and second the Justice of the Peace report of Daniel E. Williams of Britt, for the year 1947 and for the 1st six months of 1948 are hereby approved.

On motion and second the class C Beer bond, application and permit of Evanson's Service of Forest City, Iowa, is approved.

On motion and second Wm. Henschen is hereby appointed construction Engineer on D. D. No. 65, a cleanout petitioned for by R. M Hutson, et al, and his bond as such Engineer is hereby fixed as $200.00.

This being the 7th day of September A. D., 1948, a date heretofore fixed for a letting on the cleanout, to original grade, of D. D. No. 65, Hancock County, Iowa, the hour for said letting having arrived, the proof of publication being on file and the board being fully advised, said letting was held as scheduled. The chairman of the Board proceeded to open all bids on file and after duly considering all bids on file the bid of Sylvan C. Oleson of Forest City, Iowa, is found to the the lowest and best bid therefore.

BE AND IT IS THEREFORE RESOLVED by the Board of Supervisors in and for Hancock County, Iowa, acting for and in behalf of D. D No. 65, Hancock County, Iowa, that the bid of Sylvan C. Oleson of Forest City, Iowa, be and the same is hereby accepted as the lowest and best bid for the cleanout of D. D. No. 65, to original grade, and he is hereby awarded a contract. All other bids are hereby rejected.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that John Chambers, chairman of the Board, be and he is authorized and ordered to execute said contract in behalf of Hancock County, Iowa.

The foregoing resolution was offered and read by Supervisor Schoun who moved its adoption, was seconded by Supervisor Gerdes, whereupon the Chairman John Chambers, placed the motion of its adoption and upon roll coll the vote thereon is F. J Schoun, George Th. Gerdes and John Chambers, aye. Nays, none. Whereupon the chairman declared the resolution duly adopted.

WHEREAS C. F Merten, Engineer, has to report that Clair R. Nelson of Belmond, Iowa, has completed his contract for grading roads in Ell and Concord Townships in Hancock County, to his entire satisfaction and there is due on said contract a final estimate in the sum of $277.77.

BE AND IT IS THEREFORE RESOLVED by the Board of Supervisors of Hancock County, Iowa, that the report of the Engineer be and the same is hereby approved and the County Auditor be and he is hereby authorized and ordered to draw a warrant on the Road Construction Fund of Hancock County, Iowa, in favor of Clair R. Nelson in the sum of $277 77 as a final payment on said contract, all as by law directed.

WHEREAS C. F. Merten, Engineer, has to report that Leo L. Becker of Garner, Iowa, has completed his contract for the construction of bridges in Hancock County to his entire satisfaction and there is due on said contract a final estimate in the sum of $761.20.

BE AND IT IS THEREFORE RESOLVED by the Board of Supervisors of Hancock County, Iowa, that the report of the Engineer be and the same is hereby approved and the County Auditor be and he is hereby authorized and ordered to draw warrant on the Road Construction Fund of Hancock County, Iowa, in favor of Leo L. Becker in the sum of $761.20 as a final payment on said contract all as by law directed.

This being the 7th day of September A. D. 1948, a date heretofore fixed for the hearing on the report of the Commissioners heretofore appointed to classify lands and assess benefits in D. D. No. 149, Hancock County, Iowa, the hour for said hearing having arrived, the proof of publication being on file and the board being fully advised, said hearing was held as scheduled. Written objections were read by the County Auditor and fully considered and discussed by the Board and all landowners present at the hearing. After full consideration it was deemed advisable to allow Opal A. Collins two sections of culverts on east side of bridge and a surface drain on south side of ditch at east fence line. Objections being satisfactory, the report of the Commissioners is approved and the assessments confirmed, approved and ordered levied, as reported in accordance with Chapter 455, Code of Iowa, A. D., 1946

BE AND IT IS THEREFORE RESOLVED by the Board of Supervisors acting for and in behalf of Drainage District No. 149, Hancock County, Iowa, that the report of the commissioners theretofore appointed to classify lands and assess benefits in D. D No. 149, Hancock County, Iowa, which report was filed on July 19, 1948, be and the same is hereby approved and confirmed.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that said assessments be levied and spread in accordance with the drainage laws of Iowa.

The foregoing resolution was offered and read by Supervisor Gerdes, who moved its adoption, was seconded by Supervisor Schoun, whereupon the Chairman John Chambers, placed the motion of its adoption and upon roll call the vote thereon is George Th. Gerdes, F J. Schoun, and John Chambers, aye, nays, none. Whereupon the Chairman declared the resolution duly adopted.

On motion and second the Board adjourned to September 13th, A. D., 1948, at 9 o'clock A. M.

STUDY GROUP MET ON THURSDAY

The Study Group of the Methodist Church met Thursday afternoon at the church with Mrs. Otto Lemke and Mrs. Frank Sandry as hostesses.

Mrs. E. J. Arnold opened the meeting and Mrs. H. E. Harvey had charge of devotions. Mrs. E. G. Beier played a piano solo. Mrs. Kenneth Medin lead the lesson while Miss Leona Lau had the question box.

About 40 ladies were present.

Installed New Machine

Fred J. Arnold has installed the latest type Sioux Valve Face grinder in his shop. This new machine puts a factory finish on valve refacing.

Celebrated Third "Teen" Age

Harley. son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvy Barz reachd his third "teen" age Tuesday, September 14th when he was 15 years old. As is customary in the Barz household an angel food cake baked by Mrs. Barz is a necessity . . . so Harley had a nice cake for his dinner.

Name Added To Teaching List

The name of Leonard Lau should have been added to our list of folks teaching in other communities. Mr. Lau is an instructor in the North Dakota School for the Deaf at Devils Lake.

Mrs. Lau and son Allen remained at Ames where Allen is in the 7th grade. Mrs. Lau is employed in the Memorial Union building on the campus.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

"Farming" Versus "Ranching"

Talked to some editors who run my column in their papers—in states where there's mostly cattle and sheep raising—about the differences there might be between farming and ranching.

And they told me: "Joe, there's no real difference between cattlemen and farmers. We make our living from the land like your folks do; we have the same 4-H Clubs and Granges; the same problems of prices and marketing.

"When it comes to recreation, we have the same liking to get together now and then for a barbecue and a friendly glass of beer."

And from where I sit, that about sums it up. Ranchers may have different names for things or grow different crops. But all over America folks who work the land share those common traits of hard work, sober moderation, and good fellowship, whether they're growing cattle for beef, or barley for good American beer and ale.

LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD

"We want you to be free. Nobody has the right to deprive you of your liberty" It was the Russian consul speaking to Ivan Hadenoff, Soviet citizen, who had decided he wanted to stay in America "So we're putting you in this top floor room and locking it from the outside," the consul added

"But," began Ivan.

"As a citizen of Russia you must be guaranteed complete freedom and we are not letting any American interfere. Stand away from that window and don't try to communicate with anybody!" said the consul.

"I don't understand," said Ivan. "I wish to be protected by America. I desire to stay in this country."

"You make it very clear that you are being intimidated," said the consul. "Somebody must be frightening you"

"Can I help it if I find the American way different from what I had thought? I like it," said Ivan.

"Every word you say convinces me that the Americans have kidnaped you and are holding you by force," said the consul, double bolting the door and ordering some men to place bars around the windows.

"But it is right here, in the Russian consulate, that I am being detained against my will," sobbed Ivan.

"I have it officially from the Kremlin that you are not being detained here," said the consul "You are being rescued!"

"But all these locks and bars and bolts," said Ivan

"You can take Molotov's word for it. You have been snatched into captivity by American gangsters in a most ruthless violation of your personal rights"

Ivan wrung his hands

"There must be some mistake," he said. "No Americans have violated my rights. I have never seen an American gangster, except in the movies."

"You haven't seen the latest editorial in Pravda or you would know you had been in the custody of American gangsters up to this hour," admonished the consul.

"This is getting pretty involved even in Russia," said Ivan "Please can't I go now?"

"What! Moscow deprive you of protection and leave you to an American kidnaper before you as much as reach the next corner!"

"I promise not to go as far as the next corner."

"You are plainly a victim of an intrigue," said the consul. "My heart bleeds for you. Stalin's heart bleeds for you. Vishinsky's heart bleeds for you. All Russia rallies to your desperate plight. You do not seem familiar with the Soviet technique of rescues."

"Oh yes, I have relatives in Siberia," sobbed Ivan.

"You will please cease your objections. Stone walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage," smiled the consul.

"Who wrote that?"

"The politboro!"

Ivan dropped into a chair and wept.

"If you go on this way I shall be compelled to feel that you are the type of person who does not deserve rescue. Moscow is determined to save you if it KILLS YOU," said the consul.

"That's what I'm afraid of!" wept Ivan.

Prisoners Prosper

New Jersey prison authorities have made a ruling that convicts while incarcerated may not write or work for outside pay. It seems some of them have been making much more money in stir than the taxpayers who were being protected from them

When you get paint on the windowpanes, or when somebody else does and you have to get it off, soak the glass with hot vinegar. Give the vinegar a few minutes to work, and then rub or scrape the paint off. A penny makes a safe, effective scraper. If you use a razor blade or something else that is sharp, be careful around the edges. A careless thrust may jab under the putty and eventually cause it to fall out.

ANYTHING FOR A FRIEND

By MARJORIE ABBOTT

SAM looked uncomfortable as he stood with his large feet planted awkwardly on Harriet Sweet's oriental rug His violin was tucked under one arm, and with his free hand he pushed a thick lock of hair away from his dark, ugly face.

"All right, Sam, let's try it again," said Harriet. She sat straight-backed on the piano bench and played the introduction to "Traumerei" on the mahogany grand. Her gray head kept time to the music with lively little nods.

"Yes, ma'am," said Sam. His voice was changing. Every move he made was done in an agony of self-consciousness. He brought his violin up to his chin, and then forgot himself as he brought the rich tones to life beneath his fingers.

Harriet sighed as the last note became stilled. "That was splendid, Sam," she said. "I haven't another pupil as talented as you are"

A light showed briefly in his dark eyes, and then he blushed and moistened his lips.

Harriet wondered sometimes why she wanted so much to win this boy's friendship. He was unattractive. He had a last name she couldn't begin to pronounce. It was partly the longing of a lonely, childless woman, she supposed, for someone to mother

The music should have formed a bond between them. But up to now she felt she was losing the battle to pierce his shyness and win Sam's friendship. For six months he had come to her for his weekly lesson, but although she had tried in every way she knew to get next to the boy, she had failed.

"I have no friends," he had told her once bluntly, when she had questioned him, and she had an aching picture of him, working hard after school to earn money to help out at home with his brothers and sisters, squeezing out the extra dollar for a music lesson, practicing late at night. She would have loved to help him in some way, but he was proud and independent.

Sam cleared his throat and wiped his arm across his sweating forehead

"Mrs. Sweet, I'm going to stop taking lessons," he said

"Oh, Sam," said Harriet, "Why?"

"My kid brother busted my violin. This one is borrowed from my old man's sister just for tonight I'm going to earn another fiddle It will take a while They have them at Brothers' music store for 15 bucks. As soon as I get it I'll be back."

It was the longest speech he had ever made

Harriet reached over the bronze bust of Beethoven on top of the piano and took her own violin lovingly from its alligator case

"There's no need of missing those lessons, Sam," she said "You may use my violin as long as you need one." She tried not to think about the kid brother who busted violins. This one had cost her a thousand dollars.

Sam's face was shining. "Gee, Mrs. Sweet, Gee! I'll make it right with you," he added hastily

"I know you'll take good care of it."

"Oh, yes, ma'am."

She followed up her advantage.

"I wish you'd always try to think of me as your friend, Sam. I like you very much"

He looked down at the floor and shifted from one foot to the other.

HARRIET thought of Sam often in the following week. She thought of his large, strong hands that would bring heartbreakingly sweet melodies out of her violin. She wondered if the boy would like the incredibly rich, full tone of the instrument.

She didn't see him again till the following week. As he came in he was filled with a strange restlessness that he couldn't control.

"Last week you said that you were my friend."

"Why yes, Sam."

"There's something important I've got to ask you."

This was the moment she had been hoping for, in all her months of knowing Sam.

"I'll do anything I can for you, Sam," she said quietly.

He stood there facing her, almost defiant in his earnestness. For the moment his shyness and awkwardness were gone.

He saw the look of surprise on her face. His voice cracked as he went on.

"Gosh, I know it probably cost you some dough. I'd even pay 75 bucks for it."

She was staring at him incredulously. There was no sound in the room but the slow ticking of the grandfather clock.

He flushed and looked down at the floor. His fingers were restless on his plaid cap. In a sudden agony of embarrassment, he thrust his hands behind him.

"You think it's an O. K. fiddle too," he said. "I suppose I shouldn't be asking you for it. Even if you are my friend."

She hestitated only a moment before she walked toward him and placed her small, blue-veined hand lightly on his arm.

"Yes, Sam. I am a little attached to the instrument. But if you think you can raise 50 dollars, the violin is yours. For a moment I was shocked, because you see, 50 dollars is quite a bit of money to take. Especially from a friend."

She had an aching picture of him, working hard after school to earn money to help out at home with his brothers and sisters.

Tricks for Teens

By Nancy Pepper

PETTICOAT PROTEST

There we go again—the girls introducing a new fashion and the boys giving it the well-known Bronx cheer We're referring to the new P.H.D. society (Petticoats Hanging Down)—and to the caustic comments that are being made by your best friends and severest critics Petticoats have made the front pages of your high school papers, just as your long Gibson skirts did last season. But not even the ridicule of your favorite three-letter man can shake your belief in them.

CAN-CAN COMMOTION—Instead of lifting your cotton skirt demurely at one side with a pin or petticoat peeper, you sew a little buttonhole loop to the center back, at the edge of the hem, and sew on a button at the center back of the waistband. Then you can button up your skirt in back to form a can-can bustle and to reveal your contrasting petticoat beneath. It's a smart trick to play with a black cotton ruffled skirt over a striped or plaid cotton petticoat.

WELCOME RELIEF—You teenagers who must wear uniforms to school have welcomed petticoats as a means of breaking the monotony—without breaking the rules Before and after hours you can pull down your petticoat so that your ruffles show beneath your uniform hemline. During school you tuck your petticoat out of sight. So far, we haven't heard about any petticoat protests from the faculty.

PEGGED PETTICOATS—So you thought that petticoats were pretty only with your ballerina skirts, did you? Then you haven't seen them peeping between the side slits of those straight and narrow pegged skirts to which so many girls still cling—and vice-versa, which cling to so many girls. If your pegged skirts are too short, let your petticoat ruffles hang down below about an inch.

CONVERTIBLE PETTICOATS—Some petticoats are made to serve a double purpose. For instance, a pastel cotton petticoat with double hemline ruffles of eyelet, comes with its detachable cummerbund belt. Without the cummerbund, you wear it as a petticoat under another skirt. With the cummerbund, you top it with a peasant blouse and wear it as a skirt. It's a good idea for those of you who are making their own petticoat, and, judging from the reports of home ec teachers, lots of you are.

Now, that you've revived petticoats and camisoles, will you be saying "twenty three skidoo" instead of "scram" and "I love my wife, but, oh, you kid!" instead of "hubba, hubba?"

They Started On the Screen.

So many of your customs and fads start with the movies. Why that Peter Lawford-June Allyson lesson scene from "Good News" has even inspired you to do your French homework these nights! Has your crowd adopted this movie-made idea yet?

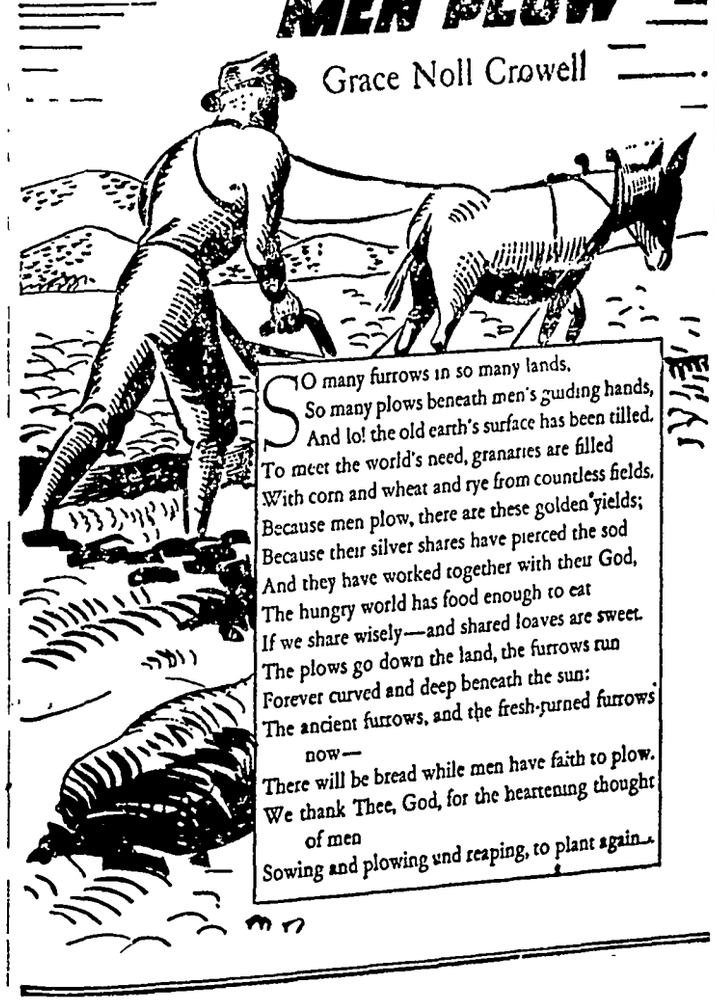
YOUR NEW DANCE—It's that oldie, the Charleston—ever since you saw it danced in "Good News." Bet your parents could give you some fine points on it. Bet they could show you the cups they won in Charleston contests back in the days when Joan Crawford scintillated more than she suffered.

YOUR NEW CUSTOM — Since you've seen "Captain from Castile," you've revived the custom of giving a handkerchief to your T-man (top man) as a keepsake. He keeps it in his jacket pocket for show—not for blow.

NEW HAIR-DO—The short cut with bangs, as Eleanor Parker wore in "Voice of the Turtle" is sweeping through the high school halls these days. But do any of your upper classmen try to look like Ronald Reagen?

BECAUSE MEN PLOW

Grace Noll Crowell



So many furrows in so many lands,
So many plows beneath men's guiding hands,
And lo! the old earth's surface has been tilled,
To meet the world's need, granaries are filled
With corn and wheat and rye from countless fields,
Because men plow, there are these golden yields;
Because their silver shares have pierced the sod
And they have worked together with their God,
The hungry world has food enough to eat
If we share wisely—and shared loaves are sweet.
The plows go down the land, the furrows run
Forever curved and deep beneath the sun:
The ancient furrows, and the fresh-turned furrows now—
There will be bread while men have faith to plow.
We thank Thee, God, for the heartening thought of men
Sowing and plowing and reaping, to plant again.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

International Uniform Sunday School Lessons

By DR. KENNETH J. FOREMAN

SCRIPTURE: Acts 19:23-41.
DEVOTIONAL READING: Romans 13:1-10.

For a Better City

Lesson for September 19, 1948

"FOR A BETTER CITY" is a good slogan. No one would think of objecting to it. If the great city of Ephesus, capital and metropolis of the wealthiest and most thickly populated province of the Roman Empire, had had a chamber of commerce, no doubt they would all have been in favor of a Better City. There would be no argument about that. The question is: What makes a city better? Four different ideas on that line—two very bad ones and two good ones—can be seen in the story of Acts 19.

Dr Foreman

You should read the story itself before looking over these comments. Because we are beginning toward the end of the story, with the very lowest and silliest of the four ideas how to make a city better It is a very simple idea: Just "holler," yell, make a demonstration. Make it long, make it loud, and the city will be the better for it. For two mortal hours that absurd mass-meeting kept the uproar going· "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!"

A curious thing, the mob-mind. If something is true, how can noise make it truer? If a thing is a lie, how can all the shouting in the world make it respectable? But the mob-mind thinks that if a thing is said loudly enough and by enough people, it is bound to be true.

So that theater-full of fools wasted a good afternoon shouting a lie into the deaf blue heavens It did Diana no good. She was as dead as Marley's ghost, she had never lived, in fact. It was no use drumming up the decibels. Do you know people who think they can make your town better by shouting about it? It won't work. You can make a town or county famous if you shout long enough; but you won't make it better.

Making Money

THE SILVERSMITHS there in Ephesus had another theory. The way they looked at it, the big thing is money They used to make money selling their little silver shrines. Now this fellow Paul had come along, persuading people that hand-made gods are no gods at all, and the trade in "sacred" trinkets had fallen off It looked like a bad year for the silversmiths. To make things better, they decided they needed more money More business! More production! The fact that what they produced was not only worthless but actually harmful, did not seem to bother them.

Do you know people like that today?

Abiding By the Law

THE TOWN CLERK of Ephesus had a simple idea, vastly better than these other two. He saw no sense in the mass meeting, he seems not to have been taken in by the silversmiths' crocodile tears. If anything was wrong in Ephesus, he said, the courts were open and trials were open, and trials could be held. We have laws—let us live by them; that was the gist of his idea. That is not bad advice.

All honor to the honest servants of the public who now as then give their best efforts to seeing that good laws are made and well enforced.

Changing Lives

SPEAKING OF LAWS, there are three kinds of people in the world. One kind will not obey the laws whatever they are These are the criminal classes. A second kind say "inside the law" but they never advance a step beyond them. A third kind, too rare, will go far beyond the law's requirements in personal living and in social helpfulness.

Now Paul had been in the city of Ephesus for some months, and he had nothing to do with the laws of that city. Yet what he was doing was more effective in making that city better than anything the courts could have done.

For what he was doing was nothing less than changing lives. "The trouble with people is that they're people," and the business of Christianity first of all is changing people. It is no use hanging out the slogan "For a Better City" unless you are working for better people.

A tree is no healthier than its roots, and a community's roots are the characters of her people. And from St. Paul's day to this, the one and only organization which sets out to change people from the inside, is the Christian church.

HUNT SAFELY THIS YEAR

With the hunting season getting well under way, the Sporting Arms and Ammunition Manufactures Institute is bringing to the attention of all hunters the fact that sporting firearms, carelessly handled, are a great danger In the intrest of keeping shooting a safe sport, the following rules are recommended·

1. Treat every gun with the respect due a loaded gun. This is the cardinal rule of gun safety.
2. Carry only empty guns, taken down or contained in a case, into your automobile, camp, and home.
3. Always be sure that the barrel and action are clear of obstructions.
4. Always carry your gun so that you can control the direction of the muzzle, even if you stumble.
5. Be sure of your target before you pull the trigger.
6 Never point a gun at anything you do not want to shoot.
7. Never leave your gun unattended unless you unload it first.
8 Never climb a tree or a fence with a loaded gun.
9. Never shoot at a flat, hard surface or the surface of the water.
10. Do not mix gunpowder and alcohol.

INHIBITOR WILL PREVENT SPROUTING IN POTATOES

Many folks who have had trouble keeping stored potatoes from sprouting are having success with the new treatment called sprout inhibitor, says Ed, Cott, extension horticulturist at Iowa State College.

Composed chemically of a growth-regulator hormone, sprout inhibitors keep sprouts from forming in potato eyes. They come in dust, liquid or shredded paper forms, and have been used successfully for the past 2 years. So far, the dust seems to be the most practical, Cott says.

The chemical is easily applied when the potatoes are being stored. When applied according to the manufacture's directions, the growth preventers keep potatoes from sprouting throughout th winter. In addition, Cott says shriviling is reducer to a minimum.

Treatment costs only a few cents a bushel, and does not affect the food quality of the potatoes. The customary washing tubers get before they are cook- is sufficient to remove any trace of the chemical.

However, giving this hormone treatment does not mean that storage standards can be lowered, warns Cott. A cool dark, moist cellar is still the best place to keep them.

Sprout preventers shouldn't be used on certified seed potatoes, even though the seed is stored for some time before planting. The treatment has a lasting effect and prevents growing a good crop.

A good foundation it the first step in building a new croncrib. The footing should be below the frost line.

PEAK IN HOG MARKETING TO BE LATER THIS YEAR

The peak flow of hogs to market is likely to be later than usual this year, but farmers won't have to take the price beating experienced last February, thinks Francis Kutish, farm economist at Iowa State College.

Hogs from the 1948 spring pig crop probably will be held longer than usual so they can be fed to heavier weights on new corn. This should pay out, says the economist. In fact returns from feeding corn to fatten late spring pigs to heavier weights will probobly be greater than if the corn were saved and feed to hogs nevt summer and fall.

For this reason Kutish advises farmers who have late spring pigs that would normally be marketed from late November to early January to consider producing heavier hogs and heading for a February market. Prices should be rising at that time, with less prospect of the strikes that troubled hog raisers last winter and spring.

Prospects of a larger spring pig crop in 1949 should bring a sharper than usual seasonal drop in, hog prices next fall Kutish believes. However, there still will be money in hogs.

CORNCRIB IS BANK VAULT TO FARMERS

Good Crib Pays for Self in Less time than any other Farm Building

Corncribs are as important to the Iowa farmer as bank vaults are to the banker, says C. H. Van Vlack, extension agricultural engineer at Iowa State College. He urges all farmers to build adequate crib room to store the 1948 crop.

He points that corn is the basis of Iowa's farm wealth and that federal surveys show that the corncribs in the state are inadequate to hold this year's crop. This presents a serious problem because the only place that corn can be stored this year is on the farm. Commercial storage facilities are short and it is too late to build terminal storage space or country elevators.

Pays for Self

Van Vlack says that a good crib will pay for itself in less time than any other building. Each year through losses in feed value and the lowering of market value because of spoilage and rat damage many farmers lose enough to pay for a crib.

Still greater are losses sustained by farmers who do not have storage facilities necesary to carry a large surplus of crops over into periods of scarcity and higher prices. A farmer who doesn't have cribs eligable for sealing this year may take a serious loss. Corn prices at local elevators last week are down 15 to 20 cents below the expected loan price.

Government Loan

Van Vlack says that proper storage will enable farmers to keep corn for 2 years if need be This may be necessary if farmers take advantage of government loan and purchase agreement programs.. He urges farmers to take a government loan on their corn to insure more orderly marketing and prevent a serious price break.

Agricultural engineers at the college have prepared a new bulletin,, AEP 9, to aid farmers in meeting the corn shortage problem. It features the pole-type temporary crib and a semi-permanent corncrib. Plans and bills of materials are available for either by writing to the Agricultural Extension Service, Iowa State College. Bulletion AEP is free. AE 66 is a list of farm building plans including corncribs and is available free. Each plan costs 15 cnts.

Soybeans will be cheaper in 1949 than they were this past year, according to Francis, Kutish, agricultural economist at Iowa State College.

T B X-RAYS TO BE MADE IN KLEMME

A miniature X-ray film program to be conducted soon in all Hancock county high schools is being described to students this week by Miss Joy Harmon, R. N. of the State Health Dept. and the Iowa Tuberculosis Association. Miss Harriet Oxley, R. N. County Nurse will assist in presenting the programs in the high schools.

During the program, which is part of Iowa's fight against tuberculosis, miniature X-ray films will be taken on the following dates:

September, 29, 1:00 p.m Goodell; 2:30 p.m. at Klemme

September 30th 8:00 to 9:45 a.m. at Garner with Hayfield participating;

September 30, 1:00 p. m. at Kanawha

October 1, 8:00 to 10:30 a. m. at Britt with Crystal Lake and Woden participating

October 1 1:00 p. m. Corwith

Rural teachers will be assigned a schedule for their Xray-s.

Purpose of the program, sponsored locally by the county medical society and the county tuberculosis association in cooperation with the health department and state tuberculosis association, is to discover those endangered by tuberculosis before it has made serious inroads on health.

Funds from the sale of Christmas Seals in Hancock County will finance most of the cost and examinations will be made only upon written consent of parents or guardians. Findings will be reported only to parents and their family physicians.

According to Dr. L. H. Flancher, state tuberculosis case-finding director, high school students are entering the age period when tuberculosis takes its greatest toll.

Sponsors point out thaht "it is good common sense to find tuberculosis before it's too late" and state that there is no good reason why every student, teacher and employee should not take advantage of this FREE X-ray.

The goal of the program is 100 per cent participation. Teachers are especially requested to take this examination.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

South Receives Wallace With Fury; CIO Pledges to Support President; Berlin Meetings May End Stalemate

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

WALLACE:
Pure Hate

Henry Wallace claimed that his expansive love for his fellow men had not been diminished by his experiences in the South, but it stood as a fact that the ramparts of that abiding affection must have undergone a severe test.

As the Progressive party's presidential candidate Wallace had gallantly penetrated into the southern states to bring them his brand of enlightenment.

But the crusader was not appreciated. He was received in North Carolina by hostile audiences who showered him with invective, vilification, eggs and tomatoes.

His speeches were blanked out by boos and catcalls in Winston-Salem, Durham, Burlington, Greensboro and Charlotte, N. C. Wallace was stunned with unbelief at what was happening to him.

In Burlington, where the full force of North Carolina's vituperative mood was unleashed, the former vice president was not even given a chance to talk. He was unable to do anything except dodge missiles and plead with the furious citizens closest to him that things like this were not supposed to happen in the United States.

It was an ugly display of bad taste that spread hysterically from town to town as Wallace's tour progressed. The egg and tomato tossing was severely criticized by top U. S. officials, including President Truman who called it "highly un-American business," and said:

"Mr Wallace is entitled to say his piece the same as any other American."

Nevertheless, in North Carolina Wallace's say was confined for the most part to protestations against the treatment he was receiving At Greensboro, with egg shell clinging to his head, he shouted:

"I don't mind being hit by eggs and tomatoes, but they would be more useful being fed to children.

"The faces I have seen distorted by hatred are of people for whom I have in my heart profound compassion, because most of them have not enough to eat."

The crowd laughed at him.

And as Wallace left North Carolina to head into Alabama and Mississippi it looked as though he might be able to use some "profound compassion" for himself, for his racial views are opposed even more violently in those states.

BACKING:
For Truman

As the two major presidential candidates prepared to swing their campaigns into full career in preparation for the November elections, some good news popped up for President Truman.

The CIO officially threw its support to the Democratic ticket and pledged the organization to work for his election.

That was the way the CIO had written itself on the political books this year, but the action left the organization simmering with internal discord.

Bitter protests of 12 left-wing union leaders had had to be overcome before the CIO could cast its lot with Truman and Barkley. The dissenting unions wanted to support Wallace, and they had their way insofar as the resolution adopted by the group was easy in its criticism of the Progressive party's candidate.

GOP nominee Thomas E. Dewey, however, was condemned as "the candidate of big business." The Dixiecrats, headed by Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, were shrugged off in the resolution as a coalition of Democrats and "do-nothing Republicans" that has "steadfastly adhered to the philosophy of the National Association of Manufacturers."

The pro-Truman resolution by the CIO executive board did not necessarily mean total support for the President, however. Philip Murray, CIO president, said that the 12 dissenting unions are not bound by the majority decision to back Mr. Truman.

"Any union still may exercise its right to do what it wants," he said.

That meant, apparently, that the leadership of at least 12 CIO unions, numbering more than a million members, would continue to labor in behalf of Wallace, while 30 other unions with about 5.5 million members would go to work for the Democratic party.

Crowd Fury

Henry Wallace, Progressive party candidate for President, has discovered that the penalty for espousing political ideas that differ sharply from the majority opinion is hatred. Speaking at Greensboro, N. C., he was pelted with eggs and vegetables—which probably is just another form of freedom of expression.

BERLIN:
Some Talk

That sound of sabers rattling in Berlin meant this time that the disputants in the fight over control of the German capital were merely laying down their swords to get together and talk about it once more

Tension lifted almost visibly when the Big Four military governors of Germany met for the first time in more than five months to discuss a single currency for Berlin and the lifting of the Soviet blockade of the city.

The meeting was called in the first place to implement decisions reached by the American, British and French ambassadors with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov in Moscow At least the Moscow talks had accomplished that much.

Topping the list of items for discussion was the problem of what to do about the rival currencies in Berlin. At present both eastern and western zone marks are circulating in the city.

It was understood that the conferees in Moscow previously had agreed in principle that only the Soviet zone mark should circulate in Berlin, but that it should be under four-power control.

There were still conflicting attitudes as to what course the Berlin parley should take, however.

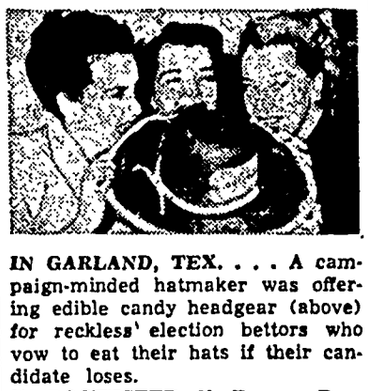
The Russians believed that an agreement on getting a single currency must be worked out before any final East-West agreement on Berlin can be possible.

In Washington the U. S. state department, backed by Great Britain and France, was insisting that the Soviets must lift the Berlin blockade before any discussion of the currency problem is held.

The whole situation was extremely complex and, actually, few persons outside of high official circles made any pretense of being able to understand it fully.

About as far as general understanding of the subject went, it was limited to the realization that unless an agreement were reached soon the tortured peace would become more dangerously strained.

Headliners



IN GARLAND, TEX. . . . A campaign-minded hatmaker was offering edible candy headgear (above) for reckless election bettors who vow to eat their hats if their candidate loses.

IN ROCHESTER, N. H. . . . Raymond Beaulieu, fined $73 in municipal court for operating an unregistered automobile, sold his car to raise money to pay the fine.

IN SPRINGFIELD, MASS. . . . Robert H. Smith was granted a divorce when he testified that his wife, enraged because he didn't know how to dance the polka, slapped and kicked him until his weight dropped from 165 pounds to 140.

GREEK CRISIS:
Relieved

Few U. S. forays into the field of international aid have been so widely condemned and excoriated as the so-called "Truman doctrine" for economic help to Greece and Turkey.

Almost since its inception the "Truman doctrine" has been denounced as a fraud, a farce and a flop. Much of the denunciation, however, seemed to be based on opinion rather than fact. Actually, for a long time it was almost impossible to assess the condition of the Greek aid program.

Now the government has come out with a report to congress that states bluntly that American military and economic aid has removed the danger of Greece falling to communism.

"While not all the problems in Greece are solved, the crisis of 18 months ago has been averted," one official said. "The aid program in Greece is over the hump."

The report, submitted by President Truman and covering the first year of American efforts to keep Greece free, embodied virtually the first optimism anyone has expressed regarding the picture in Greece.

So far does this optimism extend that Greece now is accepted officially as the "bright spot" in American attempts to help other nations resist the onslaughts of communism. In Asia and other European countries the anti-communist battle is not considered won.

Government emphasis, of course, is on the fact that the task in Greece still is not done. Between 15,000 and 17,000 Greek guerrillas remain at large despite recent successes by government forces. And guerrilla action may continue for several years, depending on the amount of aid received by the rebels from Albania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia.

Briefly, the official success story of the Greek effort claims that the nation's wild inflation has been resisted, the cost of living is dropping, about 1,000 miles of key roads have been reconstructed and the vital Corinth canal is open to traffic.

Love in Bloom?

British tongues and heartstrings are vibrating with rumors of a romantic association (that's what it is when royalty is involved) between Princess Margaret Rose, youngest daughter of the king and queen, and the marquis of Blandford, a fair-haired young nobleman. Her parents have yet to pass judgment on him, however.

DEATH CAME:
Charles E. Hughes

Regally bearded Charles Evans Hughes came within a whisker of being elected the 27th President of the United States in 1916.

At that time he was a crusty, unbending, academic man, and it was probably because of that temperament that he lost the presidential race to Woodrow Wilson in one of the closest elections in history—277 electoral votes to 254.

California's vote was the deciding factor in the final result and Hughes lost that when he incensed the California governor by failing to visit him while on a tour of the state.

But Charles E. Hughes was, nevertheless, as near to being a great man as most people ever get. And he mellowed with time.

He was the only American ever to be appointed twice to the U. S. supreme court — once in 1910 and again in 1930 when he returned to preside as chief justice.

He was twice governor of New York, his native state, resigning the position during his second term to become a supreme court associate justice.

In July, 1941, he retired from the supreme bench to withdraw into private life. Between that time and August of this year he made only one public appearance — to attend the funeral services of Harlan Fiske Stone, another chief justice, in April, 1946.

Late last month Charles Evans Hughes, 86 years old, died of congestive heart failure.

Lumber production in the U. S. this year probably will exceed the 1947 output by at least 5 per cent, the commerce department has estimated.

The department's lumber survey committee reported that this level would be attained if there is no slackening of demand. Lumber currently is flowing to markets in ample quantity to supply the record-breaking construction activity

NO RELIEF TOMORROW

High Cost of Living Stays and Stays

Here's that same old news again: There is no immediate relief from the high cost of living in sight, and it probably will continue to creep upwards throughout the election campaign this fall.

Economists of the labor, commerce and agriculture departments concur in the prediction that no break in prices is likely to come about before the November 2 election. Their statements indicate that the next President will have to face the high cost of living issue right off the bat.

Even in food prices, where record crop forecasts have jolted prices a little, no immediate relief is in prospect for the family budget. Food costs, as a matter of fact, will be higher at least until the end of the year.

Spy Inquiry Should Not Ask Rejection of the Constitution

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—When a man has a strong constitution he doesn't have to think much about it.

It works about the same with a nation. Especially when both are young and vigorous. But as they get more mature, they may discover a few organs here and there which have to be mended or a few articles that have to be amended just because of a changing environment.

In any case it isn't a good idea to lock your constitution up and never take it out and dust it off and see if it is still there.

This is the month when what Ben Franklin referred to as "the grand Federal Constitution" was born in Philadelphia after more than four months debate by the constitutional convention It was signed Monday, September 17, 1787. George Washington presided over the convention and presided as well as he had as head of the ragged Continentals. When the document was engrossed it was signed by all but Gov. Edmund Randolph and Col. George Mason of Virginia and Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts.

Baukhage

"The business being thus closed," as Washington wrote in his diary, "the members adjourned to the City Tavern, dined together and took a cordial leave of each other . . ."

Many people at the time thought the Constitution was pretty good as it was, and yet the part which is probably most familiar to the present generation is the part which our founding fathers recognized as the first thing lacking in the original draft—the first amendment:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

This amendment and the nine which followed, making up the Bill of Rights, were all introduced in the first congress, as the Beards in their "Basic History of the United States" put it, "in response to a popular demand" but involving "no alteration in the form of government." Congress passed the Bill of Rights on to the states, which, in convention, ratified them by 1791.

Establishment of these fundamental rights, says Carl Van Doren in "The Great Rehearsal," may be regarded as the "contribution of the people" to the Constitution. They represent the crystallization of those desires for human dignity in the souls of civilized men—desires which reveal his innate possession of a spirituality that differentiates him from the beasts.

The maintenance of those rights, as opposed to the attainment and safeguarding of purely material possessions, has brought about the clash of ideologies which threatens a crisis in the world today.

Spy Probe Presses Point

During the spy-ring investigations by the house un-American activities committee, there was much talk about the violation of the Bill of Rights. The President himself, when asked a categorical question on that subject, said he believed that this committee had, in the course of its hearings, infringed these rights He did not specify which of the rights had been infringed but from his previous expressions it would seem he was referring to the fifth amendment which says in part:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury. . . ."

The President said some of the testimony made public had done irreparable harm to certain persons, had slandered a lot of people who didn't deserve it.

He explained that all the evidence of alleged guilt concerning these persons had already been presented to the grand jury and that the grand jury had not considered it sufficient grounds for indictment The jury, protecting the rights of the individual, had not made the names public. But the un-American activities committee, presenting the same evidence, had made the names public and in so doing had, according to the implication of the President, infringed the Bill of Rights.

From the mail I get and the telephone calls I receive, I know that many people disagree with the criticisms of the committee, fully approving of its actions.

These people, I am sure, do not believe in the infringement of anyone's constitutional rights. They believe in the American legal principle that a person is innocent until he is proved guilty. But they appear to have convicted the accused in their own minds, feel they are guilty, and also have the feeling that anyone who objects to what the committee has done is guilty of taking sides with a traitorous person and, therefore, is himself indirectly guilty of treason.

Before me I have a letter. It is written in good English, emotional it is true, but obviously from an intelligent and educated person. It says in part:

"Why not be fair in your broadcasts? It is scandalous and near criminal to murder a man's reputation on mere suspicion as is being done by certain committees investigating communism. . ."

So far so good. With that start I expected a strong defense of the Bill of Rights to follow. But no indeed! Listen to this "but"—

"You know perfectly well the necessity of the publicity against communism because there is no other way to arouse the electorate. You know there are Benedict Arnolds by the score in the administration's set up."

Wait a minute! Is it necessary to violate the Constitution to arouse the electorate? If you believe that, you believe in revolution. It's revolution if you do not use legal means in exercising your right to change the Constitution. But do you want to change the Constitution so the Bill of Rights is infringed? Not if you really mean what you say in the first paragraph of your letter.

Who's Selling U. S. Down the River?

As to whether there are "Benedict Arnolds" in the government, I have no doubt there may be foreign spies in the government, and I would be in favor of dealing with them much more drastically than present laws permit. I hope stronger laws will be drafted. So does congress. The department of justice has been working on such a law for some time. But to say the government is full of traitors is either utter nonsense or else the FBI is a lot of morons. Now let's read further from my listener's letter:

"Canada has officials in their government who are loyal to the country and cleared out the rats on their own initiative. We have men who are selling us down the river night and day."

Well, as to Canada, no one was publicly accused until the court had decided there was legal proof of his guilt. The names of those who had been accused and declared innocent never were revealed.

As to men "selling us down the river night and day," I will take the word of General Eisenhower if, in a political year, the President's word can't be taken. The general said: "This country keeps its major secrets pretty well."

Now the writer of this letter is obviously sincere, believes, according to his own word, in the fifth amendment, on both legal and moral grounds. Yet on the same page, speaking with natural but illogical indignation he asks that the Bill of Rights be abrogated

I understand this psychologically I have found myself privately convicting at least one of the persons who was accused by a witness before the un-American activities committee although I know that investigation by the FBI and hearings by the grand jury failed to find this person guilty. Perhaps more evidence will be introduced with which the accused can be convicted under the law, but as long as we pretend to be loyal Americans, we have to hold our tempers and withhold our judgments.

Perhaps before forming opinions on this subject, certainly before expressing them, instead of just counting 10, it might be well to count the 10 amendments composing the Bill of Rights and while counting, read them over carefully.

And maybe, as a birthday present to the Constitution which has given us the best government we know about, read the rest of the document over, too. If enough people did that, there might be a happier birthday all around.

YOUNGSTERS LIKE to make cooling beverages. Let them do these simple things on hot afternoons:

Chocolate Milk Shake
(Serves 2)
2 cups milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
4 tablespoons chocolate syrup
2 ice cubes

Place all ingredients in a quart sized glass jar or shaker with cover. Shake until fluffy. If desired, 2 tablespoons of chocolate or vanilla ice cream may be added before shaking.

Root Beer Shake
(Serves 2)
2 scoops vanilla ice cream
2 cups root beer

Place together in a glass and stir. Serve at once.

Lemonade
6 lemons
1 quart water
1 cup sugar syrup
½ cup maraschino cherry juice

Squeeze lemons and strain juice. Mix with sugar syrup and water. Add cherry juice. Chill thoroughly.

• • •

SIMPLE TYPES of cookies may be made by the youngsters. Neither of these types requires tedious creaming of ingredients.

Brownies
½ cup flour
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup lard
½ cup chopped nuts
2 squares chocolate
2 eggs
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla

Sift flour, then measure. Add salt and sift again. Melt lard with chocolate in saucepan. Beat the eggs until fluffy, then add sugar and beat again. Mix eggs and sugar with chocolate and lard. Add flour, nuts and vanilla. Bake in a shallow pan which is greased, in a moderate (350 degree) oven for 25 to 30 minutes. Cool. Cut into squares.

Drop Cookies
1 cup brown sugar
½ cup white sugar
½ cup lard, melted
1 teaspoon nutmeg
1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon cloves
1 teaspoon soda in 1 tablespoon hot water
½ cup raisins
½ cup nuts
3 cups flour or enough to hold shape when dropped

Combine ingredients in order given. Drop by teaspoonfuls on greased baking sheet. Bake in a moderate (350 degree) oven for 10 to 15 minutes.

Released by WNU Features.

Most dishes are easy to wash after they have been soaked. Have a pan of suds ready so that dishes, cups, measuring spoons and other utensils can be placed in the water to soak as soon as you finish using them.

Paper toweling should be used to wipe greasy pots and pans before washing so that grease does not accumulate in the drain pipe.

Never let silverware which has egg on it stand without rinsing. Egg tarnishes silverware.

THE BABE GOES HOME

Whatever means as much as an "all-hot" is getting quite a play today in that Valhalla to which baseball folks go. The angels, we like to think, have set aside their wings and are in shirt sleeves. The bars have been let down somewhat. St. Peter is not so strict on the gate; those not quite eligible are permitted knotholes. Arguments are not frowned on and a little ribbing goes. For the first time, perhaps, it is all right up there to throw a pop bottle.

Diadems are a little tilted. The sun is shining at its brightest, there is the snap of flags in the breeze, the grass was never greener. George Herman Ruth has come home.

It is curious how many potentates and great ones of the earth are in the bleachers and how many folks who were not great shakes when on earth have the box seats. It's very special. The scores have been kept with great care. Those who did it the hard way, who triumphed over handicaps, who came through against odds are being smiled on There is an enormous section for lost sheep and prodigal sons.

The harps are put aside for brassier instruments and for tin horns and super-noise makers. Gabriel himself leads a cheer and the Bambino enters. He is dazed and needs a few minutes to get things straight, to realize that the doctors are gone, the men with the stethoscopes and the tubes and the instruments, the nurses and the charts, the agonies and the darkness.

He rubs his eyes. "It's all right,' a voice of infinite tenderness tells him. "What's all this? Where am I?" asks the Bambino, young and vital. "It would take too long to explain," says the Voice, "and you might not find it easy to understand. We're not too sure whether this is just the proper thing or not but we are scrambling up values standards and the rules a little "

"But I don't rate all this," stammers the Babe. "I was a pretty tough one in my time. The reformatory type, remember?

"And a bad actor in plenty of spots. There was that time when . . ."

"Shut up and come in," says a fellow with a great shock of hair. "And remember you never got anywhere talking back to me."

"Judge Landis!" exclaims the Babe.

"Get into action," says the Judge. "It's been lovely up here, but, well, a little too quiet without you."

"Look, is this a dream? Did the doc give me too many dope pills last night?" pleads the Babe.

"Take it from us. This is all the real thing," comes from a trio of familiar voices

"Colonel Huston! . . . Jake! . . . Miller Huggins!" cries the Bambino.

"Welcome!" says Colonel Ruppert. "And no salary talks!"

The Babe looks himself over. He sees that he is a youngster again. He observes that he is in the No. 3 uniform. He feels the old surge of power. But he still stands a little befuddled.

"Have a bat, pal!"

"Lou! . . . Lou! . . . Lou Gehrig!"

"Yeah. I've been expecting you, Babe."

Now the Babe hears such cheers as he never heard before, mighty cheers from the throats of old timers, departed buddies, the great host of kids who were called too soon, Brothers Matthias and Gilbert—all the great company of those who love a game battler a big hearted guy, a fellow whose chief mistakes came from being too human.

He's at the plate once more—and on such a ball field!
The Bambino has come home!

Fur coat sales are reported off 2: to 40 per cent. Who wants to buy one these days when its such fun sitting by the phone waiting for the radio to ring you up and give you one free?

Sportlight

by GRANTLAND RICE

LOU PERINI, the Braves president, has at least stirred up quite an argument. As you may remember, Perini wants the two big leagues made into two bigger leagues—and he has something on his side.

How can baseball point with any deep pride to its big league roster with such cities as Los Angeles, San Francisco, Baltimore, Buffalo, Houston and several other swiftly growing centers of population still waiting on the outside?

Grantland Rice

Los Angeles is on its way to 8 or 10 million people. It is already one of the big cities of the country. Both Los Angeles and San Francisco are sport-minded, far beyond the average.

You'll see 95,000 at the Rose Bowl party and some 10 miles away 70,000 at Santa Anita on the same day.

Los Angeles, in a major league with the proper park, would challenge New York, Cleveland and Detroit for attendance leadership. So would San Francisco. There are other cities that would outdraw many of the present big league group.

Perini suggests two 12-team leagues. This might be better than a third major outfit, which the Pacific coast wants, and some day may get.

Of course, the present top minor leagues would outhowl a coyote if their leading cities were ripped away. They would be entitled to a record squawk, but sooner or later there must be a change. Why should fans in certain cities get major league ball, while fans in other much larger cities get the minor league brand?

Football is an entirely different matter. Football followers in far smaller cities get a chance to see as much good football—probably more—than New York does. Big stadiums, or stadia, are scattered all over the map from California to New England, from Minnesota to Florida and Texas.

The football fan can see fine football in 40 or 50 localities. But there are only 12 major league cities, and at least 6 of these 12 are falling behind other population centers.

The showdown will arrive some day and those running the two big leagues might as well get ready for the shock.

Mental Action Sports

What game demands quicker mental action than any other, meaning split-second decisions that lead to either winning or losing?

"I don't suppose I'm qualified to speak of many other sports," Ted Atkinson told me, "but I can't see how any other contest can call for quicker mental action than riding does.

"On any number of occasions, in a hard race, there comes a spot when you must make a split-second decision. For example, you must get through some way. You see an opening. If you can make it you may win. If it closes, you probably are licked. And you haven't got a half second to make up your mind.

"Eddie Arcaro says it calls for instinct more than it calls for any considered judgment. Not even a fast thinker can do much thinking in a fifth of a second."

Atkinson is one of the star jockeys of all time He is a great rider, smart, dead-game and above everything else a fine sportsman.

"You never hear Ted complain about any mount he is given," Hirsch Jacobs said one day. "He simply goes out and does the best he can—and you always know he has given the horse the best ride in Ted's system." Every other trainer and owner will tell you the same thing.

"I suppose boxing demands flash decisions," Atkinson said. "When the reflexes are working, the boxer sees an opening and starts his punch at the split second. But there's one big difference. The boxer has only one opponent to watch. The jockey may have 8, 10 or 12 opponents in one race. They come at him from the inside and the outside. There may be someone 10 lengths back of you riding down the stretch and coming in a hurry.

Jockeys Make Errors

"A jockey can make a lot of mistakes," Ted continued. "There's one I try not to make. That's taking anything for granted. That's why I like to ride a horse out. You can't help being beaten by a better horse. But you don't like to think you were nosed out by a horse you should have beaten.

"Yes," Ted said, "a lot of things can happen in a horse race. You can lose four or five lengths on some small mistake—or some bad break of luck. But from the moment you're off and under way, you can't afford even a half-second's lapse."

Harsh Laxatives are NOT necessary for most people

The juice of a lemon in a glass of water, when taken first thing on arising, is all that most people need to insure prompt, normal elimination.

No more harsh laxatives that irritate the digestive tract and impair nutrition! Lemon in water is good for you!

Generations of Americans have taken lemons for health—and generations of doctors have recommended them. They are rich in vitamin C, supply valuable amounts of B1 and P. They alkalinize, aid digestion.

Not too sharp or sour, lemon in water has a refreshing tang—clears the mouth, wakes you up. It's not a purgative—simply helps your system regulate itself. Try it 10 days.

HI SCHOOL HILIGHTS

SENIORS

Here we are back in school again, but this time as seniors in their last year of high school. (We hope!) Settling down to the routine of classes has been hard, but with effort we might make it.

We definately feel very happy, because at long last we can proudly display our class rings.

Last Friday the Senior class elected Donna Grieman and Bill Back to represent the class as council members.

Wednesday Chief Youngbear, complete with tribal costumes, visited school. He showed us many Indian dances and gave us aa lot of entertainment while he was here.

Teachers have sprung some of their surprise quizes already. In many classes the shock must have been too much, for the grades in the book really went down. Of course, if we would read our lessons, it might help the situation a little.

JUNIORS

We seem to be having a little trouble settling down to studying again after vacation, but I guess it happens to every one.

Last week we ordered class rings. Much to our surprise, we all agreed on almost the same style ring.

In business Law class we are learning some of the legal aspects of law. We have our interpretations but found they are not always right.

Literature seems rather complicated for most of us but Mr. Randall doubts that it should be if we study the story.

Just a difference of opinions.

SOPHOMORES

After three busy weeks we are becoming accustomed to the routine of school again.

Geometry has been fairly easy so far. We learned to construct triangles, circles, angles and also to bisect angles and line segments.

We have had two tests in world history already! The results were not exceptionally good but we hope to improve our grades by forming better study habits.

Literature has consisted mainly of reading short stories and poems orally in class. Last week we were each given a chance to express our opinions on what education should do for a person, etc. We have been having many interesting discussions in both history and English on important world problems.

The study of plants and animals in biology is becoming more interesting every day. especially with the use of the new microscope we use for our experiments.

FRESHMEN

The past week in English we have been studying about our community and how to make and choose friends.

In algebra we have been studying formulas and reviewing what we learned last year.

"Good Grooming" has us all excited in Home Ec. This consists of taking care of our hair, teeth, manicuring our nails, and the correct posture.

The boys have not had manual training yet as the old school house that was moved in has not been completed yet.

In general science we have been studying the general and special properties of matter and air and its pressure.

FIRST & SECOND GRADE NEWS

There are eighteen boys and girls in the first grade and twenty in the second grade.

The first grade has been reading the book "We Come And Go," The sceond grade reading class has just finished the first unit called, "Friends and Neighbors."

We learned to write our numbers by 5's and 10's up to one hundred.

Dixie Smith has been absent this week.

Several pretty bouquets of flowers have been brought to school.

THIRD & FOURTH GRADE NEWS

There are twenty-two boys and girls in the third and fourth grade room. Seventeen of these are third graders and fifteen are fourth graders.

Barbara Thompson brought a cotton plant to school. It is on our bulletin board.

Each time we bring our dental card back to school we also bring a picture of ourself. We put the picture in a window of our "Dental Train." The first one to bring his card back is the engineer.

FIFTH & SIXTH GRADE NEWS

The sixth grade have worked very hard on their poem note books. They chose a poem and then represented the lines with pictures. As a whole they are very good.

The art class made an art portfolio last Friday using newspaper, string, and cardboard. The covers were designed with geometric figures.

The seventh and eighth grade have invited the fifth and sixth grade to play a softball game this Thursday afternoon.

Every boy and girl attended the assembly program yesterday afternoon in the gymnasium.

The fifth grade have carried on several science experiments.

SEVENTH & EIGHTH GRADE NEWS

There are six boys and six girls enrolled in the seventh grade and six boys and nine girls enrolled in the eighth grade.

The seventh and eighth grades played the fifth and sixth grade in a softball game on Thursday September, 16.

The seventh grade is studying the habits of weights and measures in arithmetic.

The eighth grade is finishing up the study of division, multiplication, subtraction, and addition of fractions in arithmetic.

The entire junior high attended an assembly program in the gym, September 15. It was very educational for young and old.

The junior high room was fortunate to acquire two new maps. One of these was an Iowa map and the other was of the United States.

Baseball !!!!(ha) The Shamrocks had their first game with Corwith, and the results were 7-2 with Corwith on top. Coach Patterson is still trying to make a pitcher out of someone. He doesn't care who pitches, just so they can throw a straight ball half of the time.

There are six games remaining. Sept. 21, Hayfield, there; 23, Crystal Lake, there; 30, Thornton, there; Oct. 5, Crystal Lake, here; 8, Hayfield, here; 12 Thornton, here.

The basketball schedule is just about complete for this year, with about 17 games in all. We hope to make every game a good one.

KINDERGARTEN NEWS

We have nineteen children enrolled in Kindergarten. There are twelve girls and seven boys.

Daryl Kothenbeutal, Daryl Schlei, Rodney Lass and Melva Johnson have celebrated their fifth birthday since school started. Each treated us to ice cream cones. We sang the Happy Birthday song to them.

SELL OLD HENS TO GAIN MOST PROFIT

Old age can creep into your laying flock program and boot profitable egg production out the hen house door, says W. R. Whitefield, extension poultryman at Iowa State College. He says the only way to keep production high all year, especially during the high price period of fall and winter, is to sell all old hens and have an all-pullet flock. Pullets lay 25 to 30 percent more eggs in a year than do old hens on the same amount of feed. What's more, pullets lay heavily during fall and early winter when old hens take time out to molt.

The time to sell the old hens is when pullets begin to lay and before pullets are housed at about 5 months of age. Whitefield says. Even if old hens are laying a few eggs, the most profitable plan is to send them to market. Chances are the old hens only take up space needed by pullets to produce efficiently.

This is not merely advice given by a poultry specialist. It's the same advice given by highly successful farm poultrymen in the state. They are the folks who keep accurate records in cooperation with the Iowa Record Demonstration Flock program sponsored by the Iowa State College Extension Service.

Raymond Fisher, Greene County cooperator and champion egg producer last year, has this to say for the all-pullet flock. "We are convinced pullets are the best fall and winter layersand if you treat them right, they will lay all year for you. They've got the old hens skinned a mile in our experience," Fisher states. Fisher had the high-production flock last year with an average of 263 eggs per hen.

Comparing mixed hen and pullet flocks with all-pullet flocks in the program shows that the all-pullet flocks averaged 194 eggs per bird while mixed flocks averaged 167 eggs per bird. While production is important, a more significant comparison is in net income, Whitfield points out. Here all-pullet flocks returned their owners $1.95 per bird on the average compared with 96 cents for mixed flocks.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Nicest Compliment I've Had

One of the nicest comments I've received about this column was from an editor in the Middle West who called on. And while I don't like to give myself orchids, I think it illustrates a point.

"You," he said, "it so happens I don't agree with everything you say, but I always like to run your column. Because it gets down to earth and talks about the right to disagree. And it only asks for tolerance towards the other person's point of view."

He went on to explain, by way of illustration, that he never had happened to have a taste for ale or beer. But that when I spoke of the right to enjoy a moderate beverage like beer, well, he was right there with me!

And from where I sit, that's the important thing: not whether you share another person's tastes or point of view—but whether you recognize his right to exercise a free choice in a free land.

Some Causes...

OF LOW TESTING CREAM

1. CREAM SCREW TURNED TOO FAR FROM THE CENTER OF THE SEPARTOR BOWL.
2. CLOGGING OF SKIM-MILK OUTLET WITH DIRT.
3. EXCESSIVE INFLOW OF MILK INTO SEPARATOR BOWL.
4. SPEED OF SEPARATOR BOWL TOO SLOW.
5. MILK OF LOW FAT CONTENT.
6. TOO MUCH SKIM-MILK OR WATER USED IN FLUSHING SEPARATOR BOWL.

If your separator is not delivering cream that is testing between 30 or 35 per cent fat you should check up on some or the above possible reasons and see if you cannot remedy the trouble.

PRICE SUPPORTS AND CONSERVATION

Consumers as well as farmers benefit from the price support and soil and water conservation programs administered by farmer-elected committeemen in every agricultural county in the United States, said Alfred V. Josten, Chairman of the Hancock County AAA committee,. He pointed out that the parity base for determining price supports is tied to the prices of things the farmers as well as other consumers have to buy. When the prices of these things go up the parity level goes up with them but not ahead of them. Price supports for most supported commodities is 90 percent of parity, which is 10 percent below an even break. A number of commodities produced on the farm are not supported. Beef is one. Lamb is another Then the prices of many commodities are above support levels and therefore are not affected. The commodities supportd are better buys at the grocery store Mr. Josten called attention also to the spread between what the farmer gets and what the consumer has to pay and said that in many instances if the farmer got nothing the consumer still would have to pay a fairly high price

On the other hand, with farmers protected from price collapse they have not been afraid to produce abundantly. Consumers have gained from this abundance Abundant production has prevented prices of farm products from going even higher Consumers have gained through the Agriculture Conservation Program which has been in operation for the past 12 years in that the conservation practices carried out by the farmers cooperating in the program have helped to make possible the large harvest this year and for the past several years. The conservation practices which farmers are carrying out on farms which comprise two-thirds of the nation's farmland are the greatest assurance consumers can have that we can continue to fill the grocery shelves, Mr. Josten said.

USE RANGE BROILER TO PREPARE MANY FOODS

It,s possible to prepare a whole meal in your electric or gas range broiler, say nutritionists, Iowa State College. Many vegetables as well as meat are delicious broiled.

Breaded tomato halves, thick slices of inoin and hamburger may be broiled at the same time. Or try this combination—sweet potato halves, apple rings and ham slices. Whole carrots, sliced raw white potatoes and halved summer squash are more vegetables for your broiler-made dinner menu. Even a variety of fruits may be broiled-fresh peaches, pears, oranges, grapefruit halves or peeled bannas and some canned fruits.

Meats for broiling should be tender, but they don't need be the most demanded cuts. Don't veal or pork. Frozen meats should be partially defrosted before broiling.

Leave the door ajar when you broil foods, so steam may escape. A wide spatula is good for turning foods when they are done on one side Follow the instructions of the manufacturer of your range for broiling methods could anyone sing when such genius was present,

Louis had come over to her, and sat casually on the arm of the chair.

"Did you like my playing, Miss Ames?" he asked politely.

"You have a great talent, Louis," she replied evenly and quietly, but her heart was racing as rapidly as the tempo of the tune he had just played. The group soon surrounded her, and they joined in the folk dances of far-off lands which they performed with such unleashed fury and excitement.

When she left, Louis volunteered to walk with her to the street car At the door she paused to thank Adele for the lovely day. Smiling wistfully at Louis, she told his mother, "this young man is a great artist; he must be encouraged."

But Mrs. Alvanio only laughed, and made some remark about Eleanor being the one with the talent.

As they walked to the car line, they exchanged but a few brief sentences, but a tacit understanding tened, spellbound. She had thought to herself, "This is only young Louis, but, oh, he is an artist!" She scarcely dared give utterance to the other thought, "And I love him."

The fiddle strings danced as the magic was forced from them by the hands of Louis. The hands of a youth, but they were the hands of a whole people, singing their song down through the years. The audience seemed to like Louis, and the critics said he was a lad "of some promise." But they had missed the magic.

After the concert, Marya began to see Louis more frequently. They would take long walks through the parks on the south side, their hands clasped together. Would Louis never speak to her of love, she wondered And Louis, never seeming to emerge from his shyness, talked of music, and life, but never those words she longed to hear. Then the war came, and Louis was gone!

Marya joined the Red Cross program and worked in several of the large social centers in New York

Louis had come over to her, and sat casually on the arm of the chair "Did you like my playing, Miss Ames?" he asked politely.

seemed to have grown between them. On the way to the suburb where she lived. Marya thought about her day—and Louis She became so engrossed in her thoughts that she left the brief case with the music on the train.

Early that spring, there was a concert at the social center with the women's symphony accompanying the young artists Naturally, Marya attended the concert. All the Alvanios were there—even Albert, who wasn't selling drugs for once. Eleanor was to sing, and Louis was to play. There were three others on the program, too Eleanor was the second performer, and she sang beautifully, her lyric soprano floating magically above the muted violins of the orchestra.

During the intermission the people talked and buzzed, and the Alvanios looked toward her and smiled, as though to say,

"See, we told you. Eleanor's the one!"

The orchestra returned and the program continued. Then Louis played, and the angels listened. Louis, with his soft, round chin resting on the violin. From the bay of Naples, where the feeling for song was born, from the hills of Abruzzi where the shepherds sang, the music welled up to pour from this handsome youth coaxing the tone from the instrument. Marya listened, spellbound. She had thought to herself, "This is only young Louis, but, oh, he is an artist!" She scarcely dared give utterance to the other thought, "And I love him."

She sang quite a bit for the servicemen, and always she was searching—searching for a shock of black, curly hair and those dancing black eyes But no word came of him.

Each year at Christmas she got the Alvanios' card, and the sprightly, talking note scrawled across its back in Adela's illegible hand.

"Eleanor was at Curtis institute," she wrote, "and Carmen was studying with Mastroberti."

But of Louis—nothing!

Marya tried to put him from her mind, but she fought a losing battle She worked furiously, trying to forget. Then the war was over, and the period of readjustment began She continued to work in New York One day she returned to her desk to find a letter from Louis. He was to have his debut in Carnegie hall, and had enclosed a ticket for her Would she be so kind as to come.

WOULD she come. An hour before concert time, she was waiting in her seat. She listened with bowed head while he played the monumental works of the great composers. The audience liked him, and called for an encore. Then Louis played the tarantelle. She looked up as she listened, and he smiled in her direction as the bow raced across the singing strings. Then the dancing, laughing melody ceased. All around her, the people stood, cheering! The cheering and applause echoed through the huge auditorium, but Marya was remembering another Sunday afternoon.

She remembered the artichokes and chestnuts . . . she thought about her music, the music in that brief case Beautiful songs they were, love songs, tragic songs, songs in praise of God, songs about men's souls, songs of death, and songs of life. Life and songs. That was it! Life and songs. Songs on the strings of a violin.

As she hurried from the auditorium and walked up the street, people smiled. People smiled at the young woman who was humming to herself while she walked up the street. They stopped to stare at the girl singing and walking in the snow

During that applause, she had reached her decision. She thought that Louis, like her songs, had been lost to her; but one never lost songs, and one never lost love. These were things of the heart—they could never be lost.

This time the critics proclaimed Louis the finest young artist to appear in the city in many years. A great discovery, they labeled him. She laughed when she read that they had discovered Louis at the concert. She was still smiling when she called the hotel where he was staying. She informed the clerk,

"Will you tell Mr. Louis Alvanio that Marya Ames is calling? . . . Yes, I'll wait."

She had waited so long . . . but now the waiting had come to an end . . . and she smiled as she remembered artichokes and chestnuts, laughing eyes and violins, and music left on a train.

Faith: A Family Tradition

Lesson for September 26, 1948

HERE IS a brief Bible quiz: What Christian man did Paul recommend to the Phillipians as the one completely unselfish person he knew? When Paul needed a man to present his ideas to a "problem church" whom did he send? When Paul wanted reliable information about a church, on whose report did he depend? Whom did Paul call "son" more often than any one else? The answer to all these questions is the same: Timothy.

Dr. Foreman

Certainly a man whom the great Saint Paul found so congenial, so reliable, so unselfish and effective a Christian, is a man worth our careful attention. We ask this question about him: What made him what he was?

Faith at Home

SOME MEN have to leave home to find faith But perhaps the happiest Christians, certainly the most fortunate, are those who cannot remember what it was not to have faith. It was the atmosphere they breathed as children. The first people they knew were Chirstians, prayer and faith were taken for granted, the name of Christ was heard only in reverence and love, never in jest or anger.

Timothy grew up in such a home. When he became a mature, working Christian he had no wasted years to regret, no wild oats to pull up. The faith of his adult mind was not scarred by the acid remains of earlier doubt. Timothy's life was all of one piece. He was born to faith, he grew up in it.

Homes can do a great deal for the children who live in them. But nothing else—physical health, poise, culture, friends, ambition—nothing else is quite so valuable a gift or quite so lasting, as faith.

In later years faith may have to be pounded into a person or shocked into him; but in childhood faith is woven in, welded in, and that is as it should be Happy the Christian who does not have to turn his back on his childhood when he turns his face to Christ!

Book of Wisdom

"RELIGION cannot be taught, it can only be caught," is an old saying. It is partly true, for you cannot set any dozen people at random down on a bench and teach them into faith If teaching religion were as simple as that, then every Sunday school could guarantee that every one of its graduates would become a saint. Nevertheless, religion can partly be taught, for in a book there may be crystallized the faith of many a generation. A book may concentrate and preserve the insight, the inspiration, the assurance of men and women who though dead yet speak.

Living with books of faith is like living with many families of faith at the same time. Such a book is the Bible. And it was the Bible, or so much of it as had been written, the Old Testament, which was the one Book in Timothy's boyhood home. Through the Scriptures, the boy's mother taught her son not merely her own faith but that of many a generation before her time.

In our own day, parents may feel that they come too far short of being saints, so they hesitate about urging their perhaps dimly-felt religion on their children. Yet in our Bible there is open to all fathers and mothers a means of placing their children in an atmosphere of intense faith.

Personal religious genius is rare; but even though you may be anything but a genius, you still can bring to your child the treasures of the Bible, product of the highest inspiration and insight the world has known.

Women of the Family

TIMOTHY'S FATHER was Greek, probably not a Christian. He and Timothy may never have understood each other. It was the women of the family who molded the boy's mind and heart, his mother, Eunice, and his grandmother, Lois.

It is always so. It is the women of a family who have most influence for faith or against it. The boy knows his mother before he knows anyone else. She teaches him to talk, he absorbs her attitudes and ideas even before he understands them. If father and mother differ in religion, it is likely that childen will follow mother rather than father.

Life of Samuel Colt

After being expelled from Amherst, Samuel Colt was sent to sea. The ship's paddle wheel gave him an idea for the revolving pistol cylinder. At the age of 14 he whittled out a model and it worked. Later, he quit his father's dye plant to seek his fortune as "Dr Coult". In 1832 he sent his plan of a gun to the U. S. patent office, and was awarded a patent in 1836 After the original company failed Colt invented the submarine "mine", while still in his twenties He died wealthy at the age of 48.

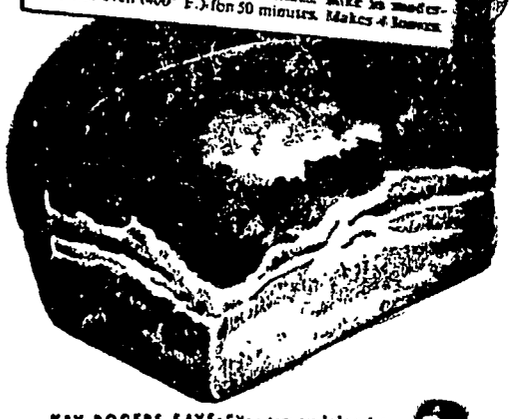
5 tablespoons shortening

Dissolve 3 packages Red Star Dry Yeast in ½ cup warm water Let stand 2 to 3 minutes. Place ½ cup sugar, salt and 3¼ cups water in a large bowl. Stir yeast solution thoroughly and add to this mixture. Add half the flour and beat well Add melted and cooled shortening, mixing vigorously. Add remainder of flour, mixing until well mixed Place dough on lightly floured board and knead 5 to 7 minutes. Shape into smooth ball and place in greased bowl. Brush top lightly with shortening. Cover and let rise in warm place for 45 minutes Punch dough down, shape into loaves and place in greased pans Brush tops of loaves lightly with shortening. Cover and let rise in warm place for 45 minutes. Bake in moderately hot oven (400° F.) for 50 minutes. Makes 4 loaves.



KAY ROGERS SAYS: "You, too, can bake prize winning bread and rolls with RED STAR. This wonderful yeast gives extra rise and extra flavor. Try this RED STAR Quick Method bread recipe today."

PREVENT FIRES THIS WEEK

THIS IS FIRE PREVENTION WEEK; CHECK OVER FIRE HAZARDS

This week is National Fire Prevention week and Fire Chief "Slim" Brinkman and members of the Klemme Volunteer Fire Company want to remind the residents of Klemme and vicinity of the fact.

This is the time of the year when many fires occur, furnaces and heating stoves are started up and defective pipes and chimneys can cause bad fires. A good check-up of chimneys is advisable.

This is also a good time for a fall clean-up of trash that might be a fire hazard.

PREVENTING FARM FIRE 52-WEEK-A-YEAR TASK

Fire prevention week is more than a week-long job, Norval Wardle, farm safety specialist at Iowa State College, said this week as Iowans joined the nation in observing National Prevention Week.

Fire hazards crop up every week of the year The farm family that doesn't keep on its toes by inspecting for hazards and then remove them usually is the one that has a loss from a fire, Wardle says. New equipment added to the home or farm buildings can present a hazard if all who use it do not have adequate instruction in its use

For these reasons, Iowa is "walking the second mile" in setting aside a special time for fire prevention, Wardle says. School children are conducting a 2-month campaign to rid Iowa farmsteads of fire hazards The concerted drive begins Oct. 6th

This is the fifth year such a campaign has been conducted in the state Wardle says that thousands of fire hazards have been removed through the children's efforts. This has accounted for some of the decrease in Iowa fires since 1945

Any farmer will be really playing it smart if he helps the children when they arrive on the place to inspect for fire hazards, Wardle says. They have been instructed in how to find the causes of fires, and they do a conscientious job.

CORN HUSKING TO BEGIN SOON

Perfect fall weather prevailed last week and enabled farmers to rush the job of harvesting soybeans and complete the fall plowing.

Farmers are getting ready to husk corn and some early fields are being cribbed. Many temporary cribs are being constructed to store the bumper crop.

Much of the large oats crop is being placed under government seal and more beans being stored than in former years.

Sugar beet harvest has begun and the onion and potato harvest will soon be finished.

Vegetable growers plan to begin cutting cabbage in about a week. No killing frost yet.

FIRE DEPT. MADE COUNTRY CALL

ALBERT KEHL HOME WAS DAMAGED BY ROOF FIRE MONDAY FORENOON

The Klemme Fire Department was called to the Albert Kehl farm home 2½ miles north of Klemme at 11.30 Monday forenoon to extinguish a roof blaze They were later joined by the Garner Fire Department who also answered the call

Although quite a lot of water was used, Mr. Kehl says that damage was slight, except for the roof. The house had been insulated with Zon-O-Lite which he says stopped the flames and held back the water from soaking down into the plaster The next morning the insulation had dried out. A crew of carpenters were at work Tuesday morning rebuilding the roof. The loss was covered by insurance

Flower Arrangements made up by the hostess were observed and discussed after the picture was shown.

The Twin Lake Homemaker's club wish to extend an invitation to anyone interested in extension lessons to attend their meetings. The first extension lesson to be given in the township will be given on "Use Your Broiler." Watch you paper for dates to be announced.

POSTMAN COUNT GAME BIRDS

Rural mail carriers in all sections of the state begin the third wildlife survey fou 1948. Oct. 4, continuing through the 9th. Approximately 900 rural carriers are cooperating with the Conservation Commission in making game counts while driving their regular routes. The surveys are designed to gather information on upland game birds and rabbits at four different seasons of the year.

In addition to checks on the number of pheasants, quail and rabbits, the cooperators in Oct. will record the sex of the pheasants seen. The Conservation Commission, is setting the 1948 pheasant season made a careful analysis of earlier mail carrier counts, along with other census reports and lengthened the season and increased the bag limit for this season.

One of the most difficult problems for the game management men is determination of wild animal populations so that only a surplus will be taken each year by hunters

ONCE IN A LIFE-TIME, KLEMME WOMAN HELD PERFECT CRIBBAGE HAND

While playing a game of cribbage with her husband Wednesday evening, Mrs. Clarence Swalve drew a perfect hand, which happens only once in a life time. Mrs. Swalve held three 5's: spades, hearts and diamonds and a jack of clubs and then cut the 5 of clubs for a total count of 29, or a perfect hand.

Mr. and Mrs. Swalve have been playing cribbage for four years and this was the first time a perfect hand had been held. Recently newspapers carried a story of a man who had played for 24 years and then drew a perfect hand.

This is one for Ripley!

KENNETH THATCHER WILL BE THE SPEAKER

Meeting Will Be Held At Garner High Gymn

This year's annual meeting of the Hancock County Farm Bureau will be of unusual importance, because of the several issues that must be voted upon by the Farm Bureau membership.

County Farm Bureau Fieldman, Paul G. Shurts, has announced that the annual meeting will be held on Thursday, October 21st at the Garner High School (gymnasium).

In addition to the business of adopting the official Farm Bureau program of resolutions for the annual Farm Bureau dues from $10.00 to $15.00.

Several meetings have already been held in the county for the purpose of discussing the dues increase and for explaining the reason why higher dues are necessary.

State Farm Bureau headquarters report that by the first of October 41 counties had voted to raise the dues. This included the 14 that raised dues last year. It is expected that at least 90 of the 100 county Farm Bureaus in the state will have voted on the matter of dues by the first of December.

The speaker for the annual meeting this year will be Mr. Kenneth Thatcher, secretary of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation. Mr. Thatcher, as secretary is a member of the administrative board of directors in providing "management service" to the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation and associated companies. Mr. Thatcher is a very fine speaker and all are urged to attend this meeting.

Remember the date - Thursday, October 21st at Garner High School Gymn.

MORE OILMEAL TO MAKE PROTEIN FEED CHEAPER

Protein livestock feeds will be cheaper as soon as mills begin crushing the 1948 soybean and flaxseed crops, says Francis Kutish, Iowa State College farm economist.

Kutish points out that price declines will stsart showing up next month. Mills are already quoting lower prices for October delivery. He thinks it would be wise for feeders to buy on a hand-to-mouth basis until new crop oilmeal is available.

A big soybean crop is certain.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Indian Troops Invade Hyderabad, Endanger Country's Shaky Peace; Russia Confuses Crisis in Berlin

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

INVASION:
Hyderabad

Events in India were a far cry from the days when Mohandas Gandhi's philosophy of passive diplomacy prevailed among the affairs of that sub-continent.

Indian troops, strongly supported by armored units, had invaded the princely state of Hyderabad (see map) whose Moslem ruler—called the Nizam—had refused to join with the other Indian dominions even though Hyderabad's population is predominantly Hindu.

THAT WAS THE whole story. The Nizam and his small, compact Moslem court would not agree to follow the other Indian princely states in acceding to the Dominion of India which was established last year.

The Nizam, often called the richest man in the world, and the only surviving heir of the great Mogul empire, wanted to rule an independent hyderabad.

Whether he could have succeeded in doing that, even if the dominion government had not opened hostilities against him, is questionable. Hyderabad is completely landlocked and has no access to the sea except by courtesy of the states surrounding it. All of its imports and exports, therefore, must pass through India.

WHILE HYDERABAD might profess its independence as a state, chances are that the economic and political conditions of actual independence never could be achieved.

Can India's invasion of Hyderabad be justified? Not too easily, if at all. It was not a matter of sending a police force into the state to quell internal disorders. It was, apparently, a deliberate act of aggression and as such should go before the U. N. security council for judgment.

From a practical standpoint there was not only no need for the invasion but there is an actual danger involved. There are no linguistic or racial differences between Hyderabad's Hindus and the Hindus of adjacent states. The boundaries of Hyderabad are arbitrary and historical, not dependent upon the geography of the vicinity.

INDIA MIGHT well have refrained from pushing the issue for a year or two, pending a peaceful settlement.

The potential danger lies in two phases of the situation:

1. THE HYDERABAD war might prove to be the factor that will precipitate violent conflict between Hindu and Moslem Pakistan, whose more or less peaceful relations now are strained and uneasy.

2. IT IS A BLOW to the British Commonwealth, to which both India and Pakistan still belong. With the Russians acting the way they are, any disturbance of the delicate balance of power that still prevails in the East could bring still another catastrophe down upon the world.

RUSSIANS:
Fantastic

Not even the most starry-eyed Pollyana could deny that the U. S.-Soviet fracas over Berlin was downright fantastic and getting more so every day.

The whole thing simply had stopped making sense, even to many of the diplomats who were embroiled in the situation.

WHAT CHANCE was there for any logical kind of peace when, even while western diplomats were in Moscow attempting to work out a formula with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov, the Russians in Berlin were inciting riots, kidnapping western sector policemen and firing on American planes engaged in the airlift?

One complication was being piled on top of another, with the ensuing result that any possibility of a peaceful solution was getting buried deeper and deeper.

That all this confusion was being fostered deliberately by the Soviets was quite evident. Their purpose for so doing was more obscure.

THE RUSSIANS want full control of Berlin, taking that as their immediate objective. Ultimately they want to force American occupation troops completely out of Germany, after which Russia could take over the great German industrial potential, including the inestimably valuable Ruhr section.

However, there might be still another reason for this display of Soviet diplomatic aggression which was planned almost a year ago to erupt this fall.

The Russians might be trying to harass the western nations to the point where the entire Berlin issue will be dumped in the lap of the United Nations. Once the crisis comes under U. N. jurisdiction the Russians might plan to use the inevitable squabble as a pretext for resigning from the world organization and taking their satellite states with them.

THE EAST-WEST split into two opposing power spheres then would be complete. Moreover, the U. N. itself probably would be reduced to total impotency in guiding international affairs.

And the question of whether the Soviet Union is entertaining motives like these might be answered by the end of the year. For the western nations were determined that if they didn't get some satisfaction from Moscow soon they would arraign Russia before the United Nations this fall.

COTTON:
Lift Dat Bale

With the largest cotton crop since 1937 being harvested this year, Uncle Sam is making ready to stage a comeback in the cotton buying business.

Of the 15,219,000 bales to come off the land, the cotton trade estimates that about a third will go into storage under federal loan.

TWENTY-ONE MILLION people in the United States depend on cotton for their livelihood, and the fate of the cotton crop, therefore, is not only a personal but a national concern.

The federal government is coming into the picture because cotton prices are coming down. They have reached 31.04 cents a pound, which is pretty close to the support floor of 30.74 cents.

Here's what happens:

WHEN THE COTTON grower hauls his crop to the warehouse he gets a receipt for it, and then he either sells the cotton at the market price or accepts the government's standing offer to lend him money on it.

If he chooses to accept the loan, he is paid 30.74 cents a pound on the average—the exact price depending on the kind and quality of the cotton.

Then he is free, for one year, to sell the cotton for more money, provided the price goes up. If he doesn't sell it within a year the government becomes owner of the crop.

PROBABLE EFFECT of this operation will be to keep a lot of cotton off the market this year, thus preventing the price from dropping through the support floor. Also, it will result in the government's ending the year with several million bales of cotton on its hands.

BIG FOUR:
Or Little 14?

The U. S. government's spectacular suit against the "big four" meat packing companies—Swift, Armour, Cudahy and Wilson—promised to be one of the biggest anti-trust actions since President Theodore Roosevelt said something about carrying a big stick.

Filed by the justice department in federal court in Chicago, the suit asks that the four companies be broken up into 14 separate firms. Specifically, the U. S. wants Swift and Armour to be carved into five separate companies each and Wilson and Cudahy each to be split into two firms.

TOM CLARK, attorney general, said in a statement: "The four defendants named in the complaint are charged with suppressing competition in the sale of meat and meat products." The Sherman anti-trust law is being invoked in the action.

Clark described the suit as "another in a series of cases instituted by the department of justice in furtherance of its program to free the production and sale of food and food products from monopolistic restraints."

THE PACKERS had another story to tell, however, with "playing politics" as one of their key phrases.

Said John Holmes, president of Swift and company: "It is significant that the charges appear at the beginning of this fall's political campaign. Apparently an attempt is being made to shift responsibility for inflationary price trends.

"No one can control either livestock prices or meat prices," Holmes fumed.

INFRA-RED:
Frost Killer

The day—or night—of the old-fashioned smudge pot as the main buffer between plants and killing frost may be nearing an end.

Science has taken over to come up with a new kind of frost killer, development of which was sponsored by the American Iron and Steel institute.

THE CONTRAPTION, known as the Plymouth infra-red lamp, is in a fair way to affect materially the nation's agricultural system, the institute thinks.

Reporting on the new device, the institute pointed out that while farmers will find the lamp invaluable in saving crops during the first touches of frost, the growing season actually may be extended as techniques for its use are developed.

Dr. Arthur W. Farrell of Michigan State college, one of the men responsible for development of the infra-red machine, cited an example: "On September 2, 1946, to take one example, Michigan had a two-hour killing frost. The next frost did not occur until October 1, a month later. Had tomato and melon growers been able to protect their crops for about two hours on the morning of September 2, they would have had four more weeks of very favorable growing weather. As it was, they lost everything.

"THE FROST dispeller, made up of sheet steel and a little ingenuity, will put an end to some of nature's nonsense."

The lamp is composed of a circular piece of stainless steel, shaped in cone-shaped steps, with an oil burner within the framework. When the burner is put into action, the steel heats until it becomes cherry-red. At this point, infra-red rays are thrown off, spreading over the area to be warmed, even entering the ground in their intensity.

Russia Is Well Supplied With Manpower

Russia and the Soviet satellites are appallingly well supplied with manpower for military purposes, according to official estimates in Washington.

In Soviet Russia alone there exists a tremendous reservoir of able-bodied men for land armies. Best estimates indicate the existence of 175 divisions of Russian ground force and security troops, embodying a total of three million men and including about 400,000 MVD security troops.

Eight Soviet satellite states are reputed to be able to muster a total of about 100 divisions of 1,121,600 men. That makes a grand total of 4,121,600 soldiers in 274 divisions, many of whom are deployed at or near the point at which war conceivably could start.

Hull Realized the Gravity Of Post-War Readjustment

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—"I wish," he said, "I wish I could burn this into your minds and memories for the next 50 years at least—that the human race this hour, this day, this week, this year is confronted with the gravest crisis in all its experience, and that we who are here on the scene of action, at this critical time, have the responsibility of saying what way the world is going for 50 years to come."

Those words I recorded in 1945 as the war in Europe was drawing to its close. They were spoken by a man now retired from public life who is living to see their significance growing each day—Cordell Hull who on October 2 reached his 77th year.

He spoke that sentence at an off-the-record press conference in his office in the old State, War and Navy building and the fire of conviction in his voice created such an impression that we asked him to let us quote him directly that one sentence. For that reason I have been able to reproduce it literally.

BAUKHAGE

Since that day in 1945 we have seen President Roosevelt die and Secretary Hull retire; peace come in Europe; the United Nations founded and then, all unexpectedly, the new and terrible force released which brought the sudden cessation of hostilities in the Far East.

We saw, too, (few of us realized it) a tiny cloud no bigger than a man's hand, take shape on the horizon of world relations.

Cordell Hull realized the necessity of maintaining friendly relations between the United States and Russia. Against the advice of his physicians and the wishes of the wife to whom he was devoted, he flew to Moscow to talk to the one man upon whom the future of world peace then seemed to depend.

I had the great privilege of talking with Secretary Hull on the eve of his departure for Moscow. When I was shown into his office he was sitting at the great desk in the room from whose windows have looked so many of the great statesmen who have been America's spokesman to the world.

The office of the secretary of state has been removed from the ancient rococo building next to the White House which, with its high ceilings, its gloomy marble corridors, wide stairways and its fireplaces, which was filled with a certain odor of sanctity, slightly tinged with a touch of obsolescence which spoke of days and eras that were gone forever.

Today, the offices of the men who direct our foreign affairs are housed in an ultra-modern building, air-cooled, brisk, almost modernistic in its design. But I can imagine that History, as she solemnly records each day's agenda of 1948, must smile a bit ironically when she notes the similarity of today's record and that which was the chief concern of Cordell Hull.

When he rose to greet me on the occasion of my earlier interview with the courtesy which was a natural characteristic and one not acquired by acquaintanceship with the masters of diplomatic protocol, his desk was covered with papers. He indicated them with a gesture and explained that they all dealt with his forthcoming mission to Moscow.

We talked for a long time and the viewpoint he expressed then concerning our policy toward Russia remained unchanged on his return.

Russia's Background Forms Her Attitude

I saw him again with a small group after his return and he reminded us that Russia's attitude must be considered against her background, that she was a nation which had been virtually locked up for 25 years and during all that time had heard nothing but epithets against her, that she had cultivated the habit of slapping back twice as hard whenever she heard anything she thought was criticism against her.

Thus, a defense psychology was built up, a suspicious attitude toward the whole world, which made the Soviet psychology entirely different from ours. Each had much to learn from the other, both must improve, and that, Hull said, would take time.

He felt very much the same way when he concluded his memoirs this year and offered this advice:

"In dealing with the Soviet Union we must never waver in this determination or give any evidence of weakness, or cease to insist that, although she is entitled to freedom from intervention in her domestic affairs by any other nation, her government has no right to force communism on other nations or to intervene in their domestic affairs in any other way."

As Cordell Hull looked back on his long period of public service the last years of which covered the most trying times up to then that our nation has faced, he came to the conclusion which more and more of our great leaders are reaching today and he said.

"We have a desperate need for more religion and morality as the background for government. The religious and moral foundations for thought and conduct require strengthening here as well as throughout the world. There is no higher civilizing influence than religious and moral concepts. Corruption and tyranny can be driven out of government only when these concepts give men the faculty to recognize such evils and the strength to eliminate them."

If the political pendulum swings at the next election as is likely, and the logical appointee for the office of secretary of state is named, it will be John Foster Dulles. It will be a satisfaction to many to know that he shares the views of Mr. Hull in so far as they both recognize the importance of the influence of religion in the carrying out of our relations, domestic as well as international.

For those who, as Cordell Hull said, "are here on the scene of action at this critical time," this fact is vital, since we have the responsibility of saying "what way the world is going for 50 years to come."

Charles E. Hughes—Two-Career Man

To mention the office of secretary of state naturally brings forth memories of another great statesman who held that office and whose death occurred recently—Charles Evans Hughes.

Chief Justice Hughes had a remarkable career. In fact he had two careers, each lasting 43 years. The first as a brilliant and successful lawyer in private practice and the second as a public servant holding among others two of the highest positions in public life in America, secretary of state and chief justice.

I happened to be present on two occasions within a few hours of each other which might be the high and the low point of any man's career.

With a group of reporters covering his headquarters in New York on election day I bid him good-night, fully believing as he and all of us did, that he was the president-elect. I saw him the next morning when he came to the door of his hotel room with a grandchild in his arms to take in the morning paper which recorded the late returns from the West and gave the majority of the electoral votes to Woodrow Wilson.

That same night Woodrow Wilson had gone to bed accepting defeat. The only paper supporting him which failed to haul down the flag (signal of Republican victory) was the old New York Evening Post whose special correspondent, David Lawrence, had predicted Wilson's re-election and stuck to it when he was almost alone in his belief.

How much of a disappointment Hughes suffered it's hard to say. No man was ever more reluctant about accepting the candidacy and the fact that he received such a proportionately large popular vote must have been gratification enough. He looked forward with anticipation and pleasure to his return to private life but his keen interest in the law caused him to accept the judgeship on the world court.

He made a brilliant secretary of state under Harding and continued under President Coolidge. His selection as chief justice of the supreme court by President Hoover was perhaps a most fortunate thing in the light of the crisis brought about by the famous "court packing" fight under Roosevelt.

His success as Chief Justice was due not only to his remarkable knowledge of the law but his tremendous capacity for work and his ability to reconcile different points of view among the members without attempting to enforce his own legal viewpoint upon the individual.

Hughes was a brilliant speaker. He spoke naturally and easily, yet with an excellent choice of words. Although he was extremely dignified in appearance and manner he was able to convey a warmth of feeling which immediately aroused sympathy and interest in an audience.

THE widest gap between college and pro football this fall will involve the financial side.

The colleges should play to the largest crowds they have ever known, all at top prices and reduced expenses, if even part of the Sanity Code works out. The pros, due to the knockdown and drag-out, cut-your-throat competition between the National and the All-America conference, can easily lead to a financial debacle.

Grantland Rice

I don't believe more than one, possibly two, of the A. A. C. teams can break even. At least four or five will take a drubbing that runs from $300,000 to $500,000 in losses. Cleveland, San Francisco and New York might break even, or make a little.

In the National league, the losses will be nothing like those in some A. A. C. cities, but due to much heavier pay-roll expenses, there will be few profits.

The National league grabbed most of the college stars of 1947—Lujack, Conerly, Connor, Layne, Evans, Gilmer, Minisi—on and on. The A. A. C. passed up the stars, although Chappuis must be rated one of them.

The Chicago Rockets, caught between the Bears and the Cardinals, two great teams, may take the heaviest financial socking. Possibly a $500,000 touch. The Brooklyn Dodgers, opening to 16,000 when they needed 30,000 to break even—badly beaten in their opener—may take the next dipping at $300,000 or $400,000.

The National league is luckier in having such teams as the Giants, Bears, Redskins, Eagles, Packers, Steelers, etc., established in cities where they have been planted for years.

George Marshall of the Redskins is sold out in advance each season, although George and many football writers are not exactly on speaking terms. As long as Mr. Marshall doesn't care, why should anybody else bother? He has a monopoly that also won't make much money in this football war.

Tim Mara and George Halas have had the two richest franchises. They should have. They built up pro football. They've been on the job 27 years.

There is certainly a place for two big leagues. But in many ways the new league was badly arranged and badly directed as its $4,000,000 losses prove.

What will happen, nobody knows. But it may not be pleasant reading for any stockholder in either league.

The College Side

On the playing side, the pros will have a great season. But the colleges will have an even greater playing season plus a far more cheerful financial side.

This should be one of the top years of college football, no matter what section you turn to.

The East faces one of its most interesting campaigns—Penn State, Army, Pennsylvania, Princeton, Columbia, Navy, Rutgers, Holy Cross, Villanova, Yale, Harvard, Dartmouth, Boston College—on and on. Here Penn State is the team to beat.

Then move to the Midwest—look at what they have to offer: Notre Dame, Michigan, Purdue, Minnesota and Northwestern. Now to the Southwest: S. M. U., T. C. U., Texas and Rice. The South presents such teams as North Carolina, Georgia Tech, Vanderbilt, Mississippi State, Alabama, Georgia.

I can give you over 50 college squads along a high level—who will draw capacity crowds. For example, Southern California may win no title of any sort. But it will outdraw any pro team at least two to one on the financial side. So will Notre Dame, Michigan, Ohio State and California.

Under the new Sanity Code, the colleges won't be involved in any expenses involved in building up their teams. This problem will be put up to the alumni.

In the old days, some football players would "die for dear old Rutgers." Now some rather wealthy alumnus will go broke for his team, whether it is in the Big Nine, the South, the Southwest or the East.

Athletes Won't Suffer

But don't let anyone tell you that any section has gone shy in taking care of its athletes. Not by any university, or by any college, but by certain proud and rather wealthy citizens who might be operating from New York or Chicago or any other spot.

The Sanity Code isn't going to work perfectly. But it should help. At least there might be a reduction from the $5,000 and $10,000 paid to certain stars—in many cases more than the pros get.

Virginia's refusal to adopt the N. C. A. A. Sanity Code has somewhat shaken the apple cart. One penalty is refusal to let the offender play an N. C. A. A. team.

THE HOME TOWN REPORTER IN WASHINGTON

WALTER SHEAD, WNU Correspondent

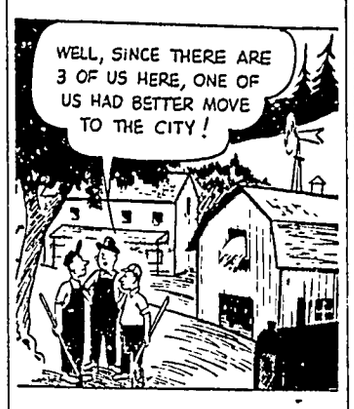
Too Many Farmers?

WHY, with the increased demand for farm products and the fact that farming is more prosperous than ever before in its history, is there a continual and rapid decrease in farm population?

The bureau of agricultural economics in answer to that question told this reporter that the basic reason is simply that there are too many farmers. As a matter of fact, the farmers can do the job they are doing with many less farmers than there are today.

Actual farm population of the country as of January 1 this year was 27,439,000 which is a decrease of three million since 1940. So in seven years there was a migration of three million persons away from the farms and to the cities.

Even so, there are still more than enough farmers to do the gigantic job of production which has been asked of the farmers of the nation, for one out of every three adult persons who live on farms has either a part-time or full-time job in the cities and towns.



In 1944 which was one of the peak years of farm production there were only 25,630,000 persons living on farms, the main reason being that the young men had gone to war.

There simply isn't room enough or work enough on the farms to take up the population born on farms. Farm population would double itself in a generation. The birth rate in the rural areas is 19.1 as compared to 17.1 in urban areas to every 1,000.

For three decades, technological development, increased yields per acre despite rapid population increases of the nation as a whole and consequent increased demands for more food, have brought about a trend of migration away from the farms. And were it not for the higher standard of living brought about by the advent of electricity and other conveniences on farms, this migration would be even more rapid than it is today.

Machine and power tools, better housing and schools, the automobile—all have been a deterrant to prevent this out-farm movement, but it hasn't been enough and the simple fact remains that the nation still could do with fewer farmers and still produce sufficient quantities of food to feed the country and part of the world.

Even back in 1930 when there were not many jobs in cities, one out of seven farmers went to the cities to work. In 1940 one out of five farmers worked in cities and towns and as pointed out above, today one out of three adults make their living or part of it working off the farms. While this migration has been mostly from the smaller and less economically prosperous farms, even on large commercial farms and the better family-size farms the ratio of adults working in the cities holds good.

Cabinet Post

Many of the political dopesters here say that the next secretary of agriculture, if Governor Dewey is elected, will be Congressman Clifford Hope of Kansas, chairman of the house agricultural committee.

Probably standing head and shoulders above Congressman Hope as a statesman is Sen. George D. Aiken (Rep., Vt.), who will head the senate agricultural committee in the 81st congress, and who is author of the new long-range farm bill. But Senator Aiken is too independent and too liberal.

This column predicts the next secretary of agriculture, provided, of course, Dewey is the choice of the people, will be someone like Milton Eisenhower, president of Kansas State college and brother of Gen. Dwight Eisenhower.

Farm Co-ops Grow

Despite fights being made on farm co-ops by some politicians, membership in the past year has increased by 400,000 to 5,436,000 members according to the co-op research and service division of the farm credit administration. Business of the 10,125 co-ops increased 16 per cent to $7,116,000,000 for the year. Sixty per cent of the business was in the 10 states of California, Minnesota, Illinois, Iowa, New York, Wisconsin, Ohio, Missouri, Indiana and Washington.

God's View of People

Lesson for October 10, 1948

"YOU can learn more about human nature from reading the Bible than from living in New York," said a Yale professor who had tried it both ways. He was right; for in New York you are likely to see your neighbors only on the outside, while in the Bible you are introduced to people on the inside.

Dr. Foreman

One great value of the Bible is its plain stories about people, all sorts of people—simple, great, wise, foolish, saints and sinners. They lived thousands of miles from here, and thousands of years ago. They dressed differently and many of them spoke in languages now dead. Yet somehow they live in these inspired stories.

Saints

ONE of the great biographies of the Bible is that of Abraham. If you will read it in Genesis you will see it is not like one of our modern biographies, it does not follow a continuous line, but consists of short incidents strung together sometimes without connection.

It is more like an album of pictures than like a movie. Yet putting all the pictures together we get an impression of a remarkable man.

Indeed, Abraham was one of the most remarkable men who ever lived. Without a church, without a Bible, without prophet or priest or tradition, born in a nation and a family that "worshiped other gods," as Joshua said later, somehow Abraham came to know that there is but one God, and not only to know that as a fact but to know that God as a friend. (In fact, Abraham's name among the Arabs to this day is "The Friend.") We must call Abraham one of the great religious geniuses of all human history.

Yet he does not stand alone. The Bible is a book of saints; the letter to the Hebrews calls the roll of some, and ends by saying time is too short to name them all.

Now a saint is not a person who lives totally without sin. A saint is one in whose life goodness is stronger than evil; a saint is one who actually lives as a friend of God, for whom God is the central fact in all his life.

Sinners

THESE are no whitewashed plaster saints, the great and small figures of the Bible stories. They come before us just as they were. Abraham, for example, at times was a coward, a liar, a bigamist, a slave-holder.

We must not suppose that everything any character in the Bible did was right, or is right today. The writers simply tell the stories, seldom using adjectives like "bad" or "good" or "noble" or "mean." We are left to make our own judgments.

We are shown what effects sin has on men, we see how evil spreads by suggestion and imitation, we see how temptation works. God inspired the biographers; but he does not inspire men to tell lies or to cover up evil by calling it good. So do not be shocked to find that even a saint like Abraham had feet of clay. The important things about him are the good, not the bad.

The Light That Shines

FURTHERMORE, when you read these Bible biographies, you can trace a very interesting story through them all: namely the story of the human understanding of Right and Wrong.

But in Old Testament times, as in the case of Abraham, we must remember they were in the dawn-years before the sunlight of Christ had risen. Some of the things Abraham did would get him into jail nowadays; but some of those very acts were then the mark of a gentleman.

Sometimes when you are discouraged and think the world is growing worse, all you need to do is to think back to some of these old Bible stories. What the very best people did then, is now by Christians seen to be not always good.

The human race has progressed, and nowhere more than in its knowledge of what is right to do. And even so, a man like Abraham, as good and great as he was, shines with an even brighter light across the centuries, challenging us to rise above our times as he often rose above his own.

40 POLAND CHINA BOARS

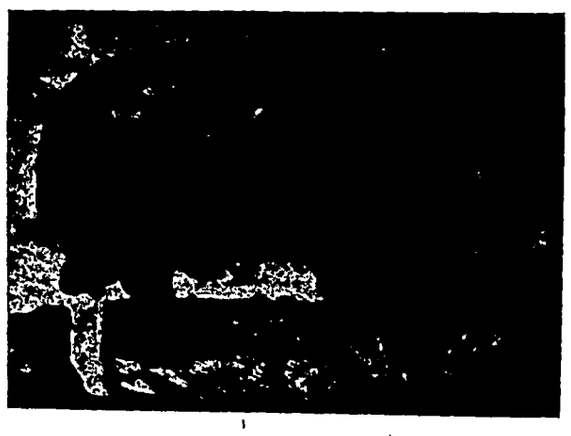
Tuesday, Oct. 12

BEGINNING AT 8:00 O'CLOCK P. M.

Sale to be held at the farm 5 miles north and 2 miles east of Kanawha.

Poland Chinas THE MARKET HOG SUPREME!

Records prove that at all livestock shows over a period of years, Poland Chinas have outweighed pigs of all other breeds according to age. Market pork is still measured in pounds, the profit of market pork is measured by the rate of gain per pound of feed. Reports are frequent of farmers marketing hogs sired by a Poland China boar which weighed 220 lbs. in 5½ months or less. A sound program of cross breeding is still the most profitable way to raise market pork.



FARMERS: These are the boars to add easy finishing, fast maturing qualities to your herd. You can do it at a cost comparable to that of private sales.

TWO FOUNTAINS

During the Crawford county fair, Mr. Brummer of Ute stopped in a sheet metal works and bought a new flock watering fountain. When the Brummers got home and opened their mail, they found that Mrs. Brummer had won a similar fountain as part of a program staged at the fair by the company. The Brummers needed two, anyway.

OFFICIAL NOTICE

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

Sealed proposals will be received by the Town Clerk of the Incorporated Town of Klemme, Iowa at his office in said town until 7:00 P. M. on the 18th day of October, A. D. 1948 for furnishing material and labor for the construction of sanit ary and storm sewers as sanitary and storm sewers as and specifications therefore now on file in the office of the Town Clerk.

The extent of the work involved is the construction of sewers in, along and upon the following streets and on rear lot lines or parts thereof in the Town of Klemme, Iowa as follows

Sanitary Sewers:

An 8 inch sanitary sewer commencing on Main Street at the end of the existing sanitary sewer line and running Eastwardly approximately 205 feet along the centerline of said Main Street to a point approximately 28 feet West of the SW corner, Sec 29, T95N, R23W, and including six (6) Tee branches and one manhole.

Storm Sewers:

1 An 8 inch storm sewer commencing near the West line of Third Street, and thence runninng East along a line approximately 20 feet South of and parallel to the center line of Main Street to the County road running South-North on the East Section line, Section 31, T95N, R23W; including 6 laterals to connect in storm intakes, all on Main Street.

2 An 8 inch storm sewer commencing near the West line of Third Street, and thence running West along a line approximately 23 feet South of and parallel to the center line of Main Street to approximately the East line of Second Street; including one manhole and one lateral to connect in storm intakes, all on Main Street.

Said sewers to be provided with all necessary manholes, lampholes, flushtanks, and other appurtenances as may be necessary.

The kind of materials, size and amount required for which bids will be received are approximately as follows·

Storm Sewers

1760 Lin. Ft. of 8 inch V. S. Pipe
3 Each Beehive Intakes
1 Each Manhole

Sanitary Sewers

205 Lin. Ft. of 8 inch V. S Pipe
6 Each 8 x 6 T-Branches
1 Each Manhole

Said improvements to be constructed of standard strength clay sewer pipe, ASTM C 13-44T, or equal

All work is to be done in strict compliance with the plans and specifications prepared by Rowat-Murray, engineers now on file in the office of the Town Clerk of Klemme, Iowa.

Work to be commenced on or before November 1, A. D., 1948 and to be fully completed on or before December 15 A. D., 1948

All bids must be accompanied in a separate envelope by a check drawn on and certified by a bank in Iowa payable to the Treasurer of said Town in the amount of ten per cent of the bid submitted which certified check will be held as security that the bidder will enter into a contract for the construction of the work and will furnish the required bond and in case the successful bidder shall fail or refuse to enter into contract and furnish required bond his certified check may be cashed and be retained by said Town as agreed and liquidated damages.

Payment will be made to the contractor as follows:

Division II - Section 3 - Sanitary Sewer - Payment will be cash upon completion and acceptance of the work from general sewer or other town existing fund.

Division II - Section 2 - Sewer - Payment to the contractor will be made in special assessment certificates bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent (not more than 6%) per annum issued in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 396 of the Code of Iowa to the extent that the cost of said improvement is assessable by law against the property abutting upon or adjacent to said improvement and against the real estate and personal property of the railway and street, railway companies whose tracks, rights of way or station grounds are located thereon, abut thereon, or are adjacent thereto, if any there be, said certificates to be issued and delivered to the contractor after the work is completed and accepted by this council. Any deficiency between the amount of the contract price and the amount of said certificates to be paid in warrants drawn on the sewer fund available for the year beginning April 1st, A D 1949

The successful bidder will be required to furnish a bond in an amount equal to 100% of the contract price in the form to be supplied by said town, said bond to be issued by resposible sureties approved by the Town Council and guarantee faithful performance of the contract and the terms and conditions therein contained and shall guarantee the prompt payment of all materials and labor and protect and save harmless the Town from claims and damages of any kind caused by the operation of the contractor and shall also guarantee maintenance of said sewers in good repair for a period of three years from the date of the acceptance thereof by the town council

By virtue of statutory authority a preference will be given to products and provisions grown and coal produced within the State of Iowa.

All proposals must be made on blanks furnished by the Town Clerk, and each bidder will be required to state prices for doing all the items in each section on which he makes a bid.

The Town reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Contract will be let to the lowest responsible bidder, unless all bids are rejected, or the council for cause shall find it necessary to throw out one or more bids.

Copies of the plans and specifications are on file with the Town Clerk, Klemme, at Klemme, Iowa and with the Engineers Rowat & Murray at Belmond, Iowa.

All bids will be opened in open council at a meeting to be held at the council chamber on the day and hour above fixed, and contract will be awarded at that time or at such subsequent time to which the Council may adjourn.

Published by order of the Town Council of said Town, and dated at Klemme, Iowa this 20th day of September, A. D., 1948.

A. R. ARNOLD, Town Clerk.
(Publish Sept. 29, Oct. 6, 1948.)

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Get The Truth!

Called on my good friend "Cappy" Miller, who edits the County Bee, the other day. And hanging up on the wall of Cappy's office is this slogan for his paper:

"Remember there are two sides to every question. Get both sides. Be truthful."

A good slogan . . . not just for a newspaper—for people, too. Because there'll always be two sides to every question: the side of those who vote one way, and those who vote another—the side of those who enjoy a temperate beverage like beer or ale, and of those who swear by nothing but cider.

And from where I sit, once you've got both sides—and faced them truthfully, you realize that these differences of opinion are a precious part of what we call Democracy—the right of the individual to vote as he believes, to speak his mind, to choose his own beverage of moderation, whether beer or cider.

HI SCHOOL HI-LIGHTS

Starting this week we will put an interview of a Senior in the school news each week. They will appear in the order of the alphabet and will try to tell a little bit about each one of them.

Marion L. Anderson—Our sweet 16 year old class-mate, was born April 30, 1932. She is one of our numerous brunettes and has dark brown eyes Her favorite subject is bookkeeping and her favoride hobby is rollerskating. I, and many others, wonder who with ! ! Her song is. "I am sending you a bouquet of roses." Marion is very helpful in any school activity and is now working for the hot lunch program and is doing a fine job. We are very proud to have her as a Senior and wonder what we'd do without her familiar giggle.

From what we hear the Juniors are really progressing with their play. The name of it is, "Mother Does The Talking" and is to be given the 29th of October

I wonder who the man was who had the theory about Freshmen always being green. I think that we would really change his mind if he would visit Klemme High once. We always thought that the Seniors were to have the upper hand, but that seems to be a thing of the past. Here's a summary of what they have been doing. General Scinece really seems to be interesting to them, because of the experiments. Thursday we had an experiment which filled the whole Science room full of smoke. Of course every one had an enjoyable time coughing. or trying to at least. The Home Ec. girls are really going to show the school some style. Mrs. Andreae is now telling what kind of clothes to wear for certain occasions.

GOSSIP!

We wonder why A. R. has to have a conference with L. W. every morning before English class.

R. C. must get to bed early this year because he has stayed awake in every class.

We have noticed a certain Senior girl is making a collection of class rings.

R. B. are you still looking for a date with J. D. H.?

S. B. how is G. S. coming.

G. H., since H. B. stepped out on you, what will J. F. do?

Watch out M. R., N. G. is still after D. K.!

What Senior boy does't wear his class ring anymore? How about that M. T. ?

FIRST AND SECOND GRADE NEWS

David Voights brought his 2 pet turtles to school one day. We drew pictures of them.

Several first and second graders have already returned their dental cards. They are Mardell and Marlin Stadtlander, LaVohn Isvik. Maurine Johnson, Jerry LaFavre, and Richard Swalve. One day we had our eyes checked and were measured to see how tall we were.

We have begun a farm unit for social studies. We are going to make a booklet for the pictures we have drawn and the pictures we have cut out of the magazines that are about the farm.

Judy Gilpin brought our first plant to school.

THE GARBLE SISTERS

"Did you ever see anything more exciting than those big league baseball races? The Yanks are doing great since they got McDowell and Nixon. And the loss of Mitchum didn't hurt Brooklyn much."

"Orson Welles and Lucius Clay are a big help to the Braves, if you ask me."

"I see where Wilhelmina is out as queen of Yugoslavia after 50 years of bicycling."

"Yeah. But Juliana is having trouble forming a new cabinet. The de Gaullists won't come in unless they get a new type of money. What's new in Berlin?"

"The Big Four has finished its road tour and now has only home games. But it has too many double headers facing it under lights."

"Truman is off on a big campaign trip. He is going to keep Washington open to the Democrats even if he has to fly supplies in by plane, they tell me."

"Do you think Dewey will lift the blockade?"

"Only if the currency question is settled so Republican money will be as good as any other."

"The spy probe seems to have slowed up a little."

"I noticed that. Truman says he is opposed to it but at the same time he disapproves of throwing eggs at it."

"What's new with Henry Wallace?"

"Nothing, except that he denies he ever let Stassen lease his apartment or gave his old auto to J. Peters."

"What do you make of that latest Hollywood scandal?"

"More people smoke marijuana than ever before, I guess. But it looks like the producers have hired the best lawyer money can buy and will advise all reefer smokers to refuse to testify on the ground it will incriminate and degrade them."

"Why don't they let him answer yes or no?"

"They say the federal officers are a red herring to discredit that new movie."

"What new movie?"

"I forgot whether it is called Marijuana or Son of Marijuana."

"Do you think it will be a campaign issue this November?"

"No, there are too many other issues."

"What are they?"

"Oh, Truman is for less relief pitching, more enamel on new auto bodies and federal control of Leo Durocher. Dewey thinks a main cause of our troubles is too many bases on balls."

"What does Wallace stand for?"

"He wants to plow under every third tomato."

California Chosen Test Site For New Policy on Indians

Walter W. Woehlke, veteran bureau of Indian affairs employee, has been appointed director of Indian affairs in California, as another step in the interior department's program to release the Indians from federal control as rapidly as possible.

Woehlke's primary duty will be to formulate and administer programs for withdrawing federal supervision over economic activities of the California Indians, and for transferring control and management of such activities to Indian individuals and organized Indian groups. His headquarters will be in Sacramento.

This is in line with the department's long range policy to shift to the Indians themselves control of their trust property, to give them access to the state as well as the federal courts, and to induce the states to assume a greater share of the responsibility for giving Indian citizens services now supplied by the federal government.

The doll had brought him luck at last: Eleanore. She had looks and background and money. Furthermore, she had the kind of a spirit he liked, which he needed close to him. To her, a ship wasn't something to work for a small house, for an ordinary living. She enjoyed what he enjoyed, fame, her name in the papers. She loved him, all right, but she would always understand that he must take long chances AHEAD, he saw the small field where she was waiting. They would drive to her home, be married, and fly away. He tipped his left wing, banked lazily over a field. A bright spot of color detached itself from a long, sleek, dark car. Eleanore waving her scarf. That was service—already: His girl waiting for him with a sixteen cylinder bus, complete with chauffeur.

His spirits surged higher. This was a private airport, no inspector would be around, so he was safe in giving her a show. He slammed the motor full on, nosed down then hauled the ship up and over in a tight loop. He leveled off and eased her around, a few wing-overs—and level flight again

Something caught his eye, the doll, swinging from the roof, grinning redly. He smiled and slapped it like a punching-bag a few times, glanced at his altimeter. He still had fifteen hundred feet. One last stunt and then he could land. He circled the field once more, swung around and when he was almost over the car, shoved the throttle full on and dove in a screaming fall. The moving doll again attracted his glance.

Eleanore had tightened her lips when he had told her it was a souvenir from a dame, before he got serious with her. It might be tactful to ditch it now—scarcely the memento for a perfect honeymoon! A small sacrifice to love He reached out, jerked it loose and tossed it out through the open side window and pulled the wheel back to neutral.

Eleanore was standing still by the side of the car, he noticed and he decided to level off. No need to frighten her. He hauled back further on the wheel. It yielded an inch—and stuck. He pulled again, harder, and the wheel stuck—the wheel stuck—

He must get her nose up, level off—he was doing better than two hundred and the ground was close.

Too close . . .

TRICKS FOR TEENS

By NANCY PEPPER

Mock Turtle.

The latest fashion to turn into a fad is the long-sleeved, turtle neck cotton knit T-shirt. You're wearing it in white only and you tie one of your shaded silk scarfs under the roll collar with the long ends hanging down in back. On the front of your turtle neck shirt you wear your trickiest pin or set of matching pins. At a CALLING ALL GIRLS fashion show held up in Stamford, Conn., we counted no less than eight of these shirts, similarly scarfed, in the first row of the audience! Your favorite teen department has the T shirts, you have the scarfs—so what are you waiting for—a date with Lon McAllister?

Time Marches On.

Oh, happy the days when dates were for eating
And happy the days when dates were for learning;
But, now you're a teen, there's no retreating—
Dates are for making, breaking—and yearning.

You Said It—and You're Glad!

"Well, Mock My Shodesty"—Expression of surprise which you could transpose to mean, "Well, Shock My Modesty." Only it wouldn't be so much fun that way.

"Glad to Hear It"—Your comment on any good news.

"Sad to Hear It"—Ditto on any bad news.

"Concoct a Witticism"—Very formal for "pop a corny."

"That's Your Red Wagon"—That's your worry.

"Icky Bird" — New name for a drip and no relation to the Dicky Bird who announces spring in that popular song.

"T Man"—Top man, formerly known as your O. A. O.

"Once in a Red Moon"—Indicates a much longer interval than the traditional "Blue Moon."

"I Wish Your Mother Had Raised Ducks Instead"—This retort can mean only one thing: that you wish the person to whom you're talking had never been born.

"Chee Chee"—You pipe it in a mousy voice and it means "wonderful." It also means you've been spinning Rose Murphy's platters.

Well, as the man said when he followed the fire engines, "I want to see what's cooking!"

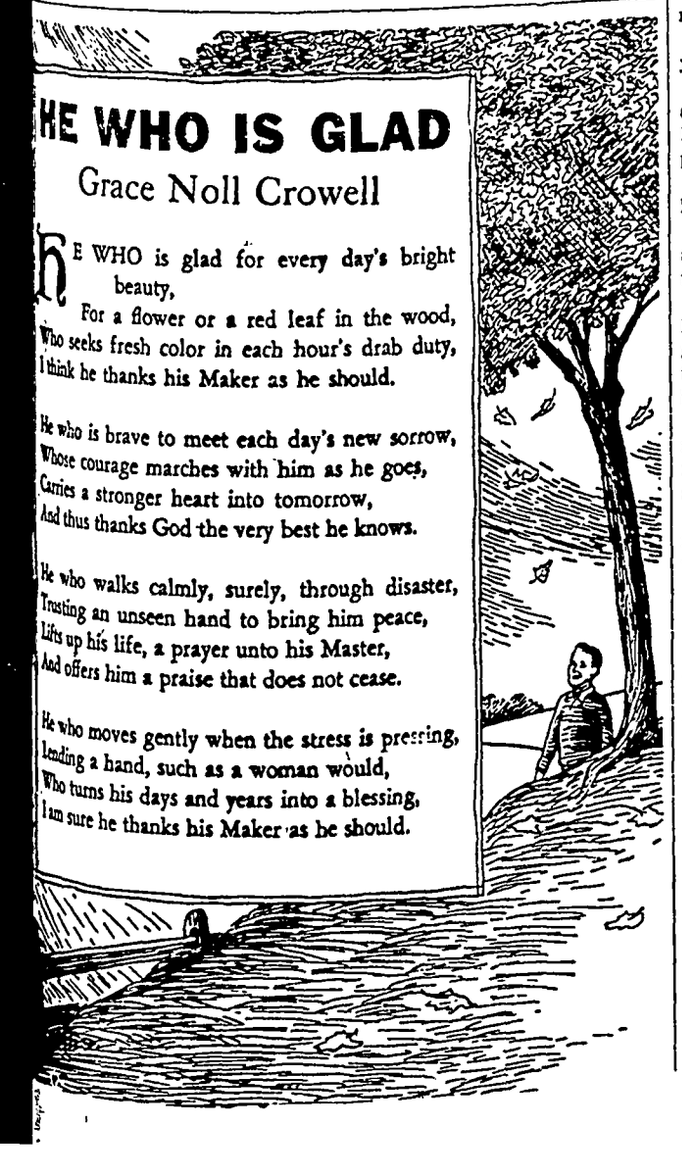
TRIXIE TEEN SAYS—

You're so engrossed in how you're going to look for this important date that you haven't given much thought to how you're going to sound. You know he's a big basket ball player; you know he's a bug for aviation; you know he's majoring in history and economics at school. They're all clues to his interests—but you haven't had time to follow one of them. Instead, you've concentrated on your clothes, your hair, your make-up. Well, you'll be pretty as a picture, all right—but haven't you heard that silent pictures are obsolete? These days, a boy prefers a picture with sound—a talky that really has something to say!



HE WHO IS GLAD

Grace Noll Crowell

HE WHO is glad for every day's bright beauty,
For a flower or a red leaf in the wood,
Who seeks fresh color in each hour's drab duty,
I think he thanks his Maker as he should.

He who is brave to meet each day's new sorrow,
Whose courage marches with him as he goes,
Carries a stronger heart into tomorrow,
And thus thanks God the very best he knows.

He who walks calmly, surely, through disaster,
Trusting an unseen hand to bring him peace,
Lifts up his life, a prayer unto his Master,
And offers him a praise that does not cease.

He who moves gently when the stress is pressing,
Lending a hand, such as a woman would,
Who turns his days and years into a blessing,
I am sure he thanks his Maker as he should.

Careful Planning Urged To Make Light Meals Nutritious and Balanced

ARE THE LIGHT MEALS you serve always nutritious? Or are they just something you throw together for the sake of giving calories to your family, even though the foods are not particularly abundant in health-giving elements such as protein, vitamins and minerals?

You're guaranteed to feel better, work better and, yes even play better if you're getting the right kind of food. Nutritious meals, no matter whether they are small or large, are bound to pay off big dividends.

Just how, you ask? Well, for one thing, you won't get tired so quickly, and there will be sparkle in your eyes and smiles and a general glow of health about you. Your scratches and cuts, for example, will heal more readily if you're getting vitamin C in ample quantities.

Serve a salad for lunch and get your nutrients the easy way. Muffins or sandwiches with milk or a nourishing beverage help give a well balanced meal.

That dragged out feeling may come from lack of the B complex vitamins which guard general well being, or it may come from lack of iron in the blood which helps carry oxygen we breathe to all parts of the body.

If you're troubled with night blindness, poor appetite, and get colds and infections readily, you're apt to be getting less than your share of vitamin A.

When teeth are in poor condition it would be wise to check on your calcium, phosphorous and vitamins C and D. Any one or all of these may be responsible.

Dinners are apt to be rather well balanced to give the essential food elements, but frequently the cause of many ills is the lack of good lighter meals such as lunches or suppers. Some people skip lunch others nibble at little or nothing, while some eat something that satisfies hunger without regard to satisfying bodily needs.

Keep your refrigerator well stocked with fruits and vegetables, so that you always can toss a salad together. Serve this with sandwiches if you're hungry or gingerbread if you want a kind of bread and dessert together. Add to this a nourishing beverage and you'll have a lunch that satisfies hunger as well as dietary needs. Doesn't take much longer to fix than a snack!

Soups and juices are good to have on hand because they satisfy vitamin and mineral requirements. Plan, however, to serve a salad with them or a nourishing milk drink or dessert.

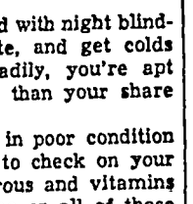
CHOOSE FROM AMONG these recipes for those light lunches or suppers. Foods contained in them are vitamin and mineral conscious, but still will be found to be very appetizing and refreshing.



Molasses Milk Shake
(Serves 1)

1 tablespoon pure dark molasses
1 cup cold milk
Dash of cinnamon

Combine molasses, milk and cinnamon. Shake well and serve immediately.

Molasses Banana Milk Shake
(Serves 1)

1 medium ripe banana
1 cup cold milk
Few grains of salt
1 tablespoon pure dark molasses
Few drops vanilla extract

Mash banana with fork until smooth; add milk, salt, molasses and vanilla extract. Shake well.

Combination Salad
(Serves 5)

1 cup cooked string beans
½ cup shredded raw carrots
½ cup celery strips
2 cups shredded lettuce
1 hard-cooked egg, sliced
French dressing

Combine vegetables and mix lightly. Arrange sliced eggs over vegetables and serve with french dressing.

THESE FRUIT SALAD combinations will enable you to add nutritive value as well as appetite appeal to light meals.

1. Orange wedges, sliced banana, pear or peach half, diced apple and white grapes or cherries. Serve with sweet french dressing.

2. Pear halves with pimiento cheese balls on lettuce, served with french dressing or mayonnaise.

3. Pineapple chunks, apple strips, diced celery with riced American cheese over top, served with sour cream dressing.

4. Calavo filled with orange and grapefruit segments, served with french dressing.

5. Orange and grapefruit sections with thick slices of banana, served with the following dressing: One cup mayonnaise, one-half cup molasses and three tablespoons of lemon juice to serve four.

TRY THESE sandwich combinations as a means of varying the luncheon menu.

1. Old English cheese or smoked American cheese with bits of cooked crumbled bacon.

2. Egg salad with finely chopped pickle and celery with enough salad dressing to moisten.

A simple but easy dessert for one of those light lunches includes tall glasses of milk with a very dark and delicious gingerbread. Serving gingerbread is an easy way to work iron into the diet by means of the molasses.

3. Mashed liver sausage mixed with finely chopped, hard-cooked eggs, moistened with cream and seasoned with salt and pepper.

4. Peanut butter mixed with crumbled, cooked bacon or shredded carrots, or honey or chow chow.

5. Ground leftover meat mixed with ground raw carrot, moistened with mayonnaise and seasoned with salt, pepper and onion juice.

Very Best Gingerbread
(Serves 16)

½ cup butter or shortening
½ cup granulated sugar
1 egg, beaten
2½ cups sifted flour
1½ teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon ginger
½ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup pure, dark molasses
1 cup hot water

Cream shortening and sugar. Add beaten egg. Measure and sift dry ingredients. Combine molasses and hot water. Add dry ingredients to first mixture alternately with liquid, a small amount at a time, and beat after each addition until smooth. Bake in a paper-lined pan (9 x 9 x 2 inches) in a moderate (350 degree) oven for 50 minutes.

New Flavor Tricks

Meat loaf will take on an inviting flavor if you fold in one-half cup of grated parmesan cheese into the mixture before baking it.

Chopped ham is delicious to add to your favorite plain or cheese souffle, fondue, omelet or scrambled eggs.

Pork sausage will have a special appeal when you prepare with macaroni and a chili-flavored tomato sauce.

When brining pickles in a crock, the skum should be removed as it gathers. Scum causes spoilage.

Corned beef patties are delicious when made with chopped green pepper, served with a tomato sauce when they are browned golden and crisp.

Try this new trick the next time you serve the old favorite, spareribs with sauerkraut: Place the sauerkraut on one rack of ribs, sprinkle with caraway seed and top with another rack of ribs. Braise until done.

Farmers' Exports

Nearly all of the farmers who operate the more than 150,000 farms in Kansas grow one or more crops for export and benefit directly from foreign trade, according to a United States State Department report.

The report cites Cuba's importance as a purchaser of this country's farm and other products and comments that under the stimulus of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements program, Cuba's imports of wheat flour from the United States increased from $2,935,000 in 1933 to $5,383,000 in 1938, or about 83 per cent.

PLAY IT SAFE IN CORN PICKER USE

Iowa farmers should never bet their life, hand or arm unless they are willing to lose it, Norval J. Wardle, farm safety specialist at Iowa State College, warns mechanical corn picker and corn elevator operators.

Wardle points out that there isn't a safe method of cleaning out a corn picker while it is in operation. Many farmers are lucky and escape injury but 184 Iowans were not quite so fortunate the last year. In those 184 corn harvest accidents last year, 144 were traced back to the corn picker and 40 to the elevator. Four Iowans lost their lives due to corn harvesting accidents.

There are more than 60,000 mechanical pickers in Iowa, Wardle says that 184 accidents for the number of machines is low, but there are numerous injuries that were not reported to his office.

The most common cause of injury was found to be performing unsafe operations such as cleaning out the snapping rollers while the machine was running and stepping over uncovered power take-offs. Other errors found by Wardle were the failure to use safety devices and too much hurry.

Wardle says never clean out the snapping husking rollers while the machine is running. Stop the machine before lubricationg. Keep power take-off covered and make sure there are no children around when the machine is started.

Reports show that some of the operators who were seriously injured and escaped with only minor injuries before.

SUNBEAMS HONOR LEADER

Mrs. Roy Arnold was pleasantly surprised at a regular meeting of the Avery Sunbeams, when all of the girls' mothers also came. A waffle iron was presented to her by the girls in appreciation for everything she has done for our 4-H club. All of the old members and five new girls were present at the meeting held at Judy Brede's Oct. 9th.

For new business we had an election and installation of new officers. They are as follows: President, Mary Ann Blumer; Vice-President, Iris Rosendahl; Sec.-Treas., Lillian Wille; Historian, Lois Lowenberg. In return for our enrollment cards, Mrs. Arnold gave each of us a cookie cutter. Our project this year will be foods. On the program were several talks, "Proper Care of Shoes" by Lois Helps and "Selection of Slips" by Harriet Ostendorf. Iris Rosendahl gave a demonstration on "Ironing a Blouse" and Lois Helps and Doris Gruis showed us different "Seam Finishes". Judy Brede showed us how to put in a zipper and Jo Ann Lowenberg and Judy Brede told us how to identify fabrics.

The next meeting will be at the home of Jo Ann Burgess, Nov. 13. Any girls wanting to join the club are invited to come.

Three Birthdays In One Day At The Asa Arnold Home

Thursday, October 7th was a big day at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Asa Arnold as on that day their three children all had birthdays: Clarice Ann was 4 years old and the twins, Rosalyn and Marilyn were 1 year old.

Relatives and friends called at the Arnold home throughout the day to wish happy birthday greetings.

Mrs. Arnold baked and decorated three birthday cakes for the occasion. All of the children received nice gifts.

FARMERS CAN NOW OBTAIN STORED LOANS ON 1948 SOYBEANS AT $2.18

Alfred V. Josten, Chairman of the Hancock County Agricultural Conservation Committee, has announced that farmers may obtain farm and warehouse stored loans on 1948 soybeans, green and yellow varities, at $2.18 per bushel on soybeans grading U. S. No. 2, and containing not more than 14 percent moisture. In addition to the $2.18 per bushel basic loan rate for No. 2 soybeans, producers can obtain a maximum premium of $0.06 per bushel for soybeans containing 11.3 percent moisture. Farm stored beans earn a $0.07 per bushel storage allowance if the soybeans are delivered to Commodity Credit Corporation in satisfaction for the loan at maturity. This makes a maximum rate of $2.31 per bushel for soybeans containing less than 11.3 percent moisture on farm stored loans.

Purchase agreements are also available to producers, and to guarantee the loan rates to producers executing them. Warehouse loans are also available, and in the event that warehouse loans are delivered to Commodity Credit Corporation, the Corporation, the Government will assume and pay all warehouse charges.

The loans are Purchase Agreements are available until Dec. 31, 1948.

BOY SCOUT DRIVE

FINANCE DRIVE FOR BOY SCOUTS THIS WEEK

This week a number of local Legion members are out collecting for the Boy Scouts. This is a national drive called "Friends of Scouting." The money helps to maintain Headquarters, a Camp, and a trained staff to administer and promote Scouting in all communities. Each troop has a committee of local men, and they in turn are on District Committees. The District Committees decide on how the money is to be spent. The Boy Scouts help Character Building and Citizenship Training.

Anyone wishing to help the Boy Scouts, and to become a "Friend of Scouting" may leave their contribution with Bob Hartzell at the Post Office.

C. GROSSHUESCH HEADS DRIVE

CROP CAMPAIGN TO HELP UNDERNOURISHED IN EUROPE BEGINS

Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch Has Been Appointed County Convenor

Rev Calvin Grosshuesch of Klemme has been appointed as county convenor for Hancock County Christian Rural Overseas Program at district meeting held in Algona Friday, according to Rev. William B. Gamble, of Clarion, district supervisor for Hancock, Humbolt, Winnebago, Kossuth and Wright counties. The Hancock County organizational meeting is to be held in the Garner Court House on Oct. 25th at 8:00 p. m. Church and civic leaders of the community are to be invited.

Iowa's goal will be 300 carloads of foodstuffs. During the Thanksgiving week, canvassers will visit all farms in Hancock County for pledges of corn, wheat, soybeans, livestock, milk and other farm produce to be included in Iowa Christian Relief Trains. Special school collections will be held for money with which to purchase powdered milk and relief cereal.

Albert W. Farmer, Iowa crop director, pointed out that "although the Marshall plan and this year's better crops in Europe put food on store shelves to sell, only church relief, always given free to those in need, can keep Europe alive - can give it hope - can strengthen it for democratic living."

The Hancock County drive is part of a national relief program in which 34 states are participating It is sponsored by Catholic Rural Life, Lutheran World Relief and Church World Service (Protestant) and is the first joint program of its kind to be inaugurated. In addition, 15 farm and community organizations are giving the campaign support, including Farm Bureau, Extension Service, Dept. of Agriculture, Dept. of Public Instruction, Farmers' Union and the Education Association.

ANNUAL FARM BUREAU MEETING

The annual meeting of the Hancock County Farm Bureau is scheduled for Thursday evening, October 21, 8:00 p. m. at the Garner High School auditorium.

Mr. Kenneth Thatcher, Secretary of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation will be the guest speaker for this annual meeting. This will be Mr Thatcher's first appearance as a speaker in Hancock County, so let's give him a large group of listeners as a welcome to our county.

An appropriate program is being arranged and a light lunch will be served.

Remember:

WHAT - Hancock County Farm Bureau meeting

WHEN - Thursday evening 8:00 p m October 21.

WHERE - Garner High School auditorium.

SPEAKER - Kenneth Thatcher, Secretary of Iowa Farm Bureau Federation.

Local 4-H Clubs In Hancock County Are Conducting Membership Campaign

All of the 31 local 4-H clubs in Hancock County are conducting campaigns for new members during the month of October according to Paul Henderson and Elsie Van Wert, County Extension workers. They are poining the state wide 4-H enrollment campaign to raise the State 4-H enrollment to 45,000 members in 1949. See your local 4-H leader or your County Extension Service office to join a 4-H club. Be one of the 500 Hancock 4-H members in 1949. You can't afford to miss this worthwhile training.

DRIVE GETS UNDER WAY FOR MORE 4-H MEMBERS

4-H clubs all over Iowa open a new year this month with a drive for more members.

More than 40 years ago farm boys and girls were introduced to an organization specially for them—the club whose symbol became the fourleaf clover. Since that time the ranks have grown to nearly 2 million. Iowa officials have set the goal at 45,000 members in 1949. That's 6,000 more than last year.

Expansion came because the 4-H movement meets the needs of farm boys and girls, says R. K. Bliss, of the Agricultural Extension Service at Iowa State College. If it continues to grow, more and more farm youngsters will have a chance to reap these benefits, he points out.

"Club work teaches boys and girls in terms of things they are doing now and will be doing later in life," according to Bliss He cites agricultural and home economics projects, which combine science with practice.

Teaching youngsters in rural communities how to work together is an important 4-H doctorne, Bliss says. 4-H clubs help farm boys and girls plan ahead.

The 4-H movement makes contributions above and beyond those to the individual member, Bliss points out. Club work practices democracy and trains for citizenship.

SOLDIERS BONUS

POLL SHOWS IOWA VOTERS FOR BONUS

According to the Iowa Public Opinion Panel, three out of four voters approve the proposed bonus for veterans of World War II

The bonus to be paid from a bond issue of 85 million dollars has been discussed by some political leaders both pro and con. Some politicos have suggested that the bonus be paid from the State Treasury and thus save the interest which would be necessary on a bond issue. Regardless of the method of payment it now appears that the issue would be approved by the voters by about six to one.

The service compensation to eligible men and women would be $10 for each month of domestic service and $12.50 for each month of active foreign service. Maximum individual payments would be $500.

The executive committee and the state convention of The American Legion have voted to support the issue in the November election and will make every effort to get out the votes to pass the measure.

Grandma Kluckhohn Celebrated 89th Birthday Sunday

Mrs. G. W Kluckhohn was 89 years old October 6th and on Sunday, October 10 her relatives gathered at her home to celebrate the event with a big dinner.

Those present were her children: Frank Kluckhohn, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kluckhohn, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Kluckhohn and Sadie Turgasen; also her grandchildren and their families: Kenneth Kluckhohn and family; Lynford Back and his family; Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Keraus; Carold Larson and family; Verle Keraus and family; Franklin Kluckhohn and Clarence Kluckhohn.

Families unable to attend were Eugene Kluckhohn, Donald Turgasen and Otho Keraus.

Grandma Kluckhohn, received many nice gifts and cards.

ANNUAL DRIVE FOR CHILDRENS HOME SOCIETY THIS MONTH

SET SEASONS FOR QUAIL AND FUR-BEARERS

The Conservation Commission has announced seasons on quail and fur-bearing animals, and all seasons for 1948 hunting and trapping have now been established.

The quail season will open Nov. 1st in 46 counties. Shooting will be legal from 8:30 a. m. to 4:30 p. m. for 15 days in 10 counties, for 45 days in 36 counties. Bag limit is eight, possession limit eight.

A 20-day season has been established for the trapping of muskrat and mink, from 12:00 noon December 1 to 12:00 midnight December 20, with 30 southern and southwestern counties closed to the taking of these two popular fur-bearers.

The season on other protected fur-bearers, including badger, racoon, skunk, opossum, and spotted skunk, has been set from noon November 10 to midnight January 10.

AMERICAN LEGION AUX. MET TUESDAY EVENING, OCT. 5TH

The monthly meeting of the Adam-Schaefer Unit of the American Legion Auxiliary met Tuesday evening, October 5th, at the Legion Hall, with Mrs. Margaret Thomas, unit president, presiding.

The motion was made and carried to bond our unit treasurer to comply with the National Headquarters' By-Laws.

Mrs. Ann Buseman of the finance committe announced the plans for an afternoon party to be held Friday, Oct. 15th.

The annual dues, not already paid by the members, must be paid immediately, as the unit secretary, Mrs. Helen Stille, must have her report into Department Headquarters by October 20th in order to give our unit full credit.

The unit decided to order the same number of popies as last year The poppies will cost more this year, since the supplies are higher and the veterans making the poppies will receive 2½c per poppy. The money received from making the poppies is the only means of livelihood for some of the veterans.

Lunch following the meeting was served by Mrs. Ann Buseman, Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Buseman, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Buss.

Farmer Injured When Kicked By Steer

Henry Busse has been limping around the past week and had to use a cane in order to walk. Mr Busse was helping separate some steers into a group when one of them kicked him hard on the inside of his leg below the knee. No bones were broken, but Mr. Busse suffered painful bruises.

Visited Black Hills And Mrs. Anna Waddingham

Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Waddingham returned home Wednesday morning from a trip through the Dakotas where they visited with relatives. They also toured the Bad Lands and the Black Hills of South Dakota.

Circle Four Meets

Several members of the Circle Four met Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. Ronald Gibbs. After short devotions, Mrs. Harry Gibbs had a couple of fines games we played. The rest of the evening was spent in planning our booth for the fall bazaar to be held in November. A delicious lunch was served by Mrs. Gibbs.

ANNUAL DRIVE FOR IOWA CHILDREN'S HOME SOCIETY BEGINS OCT. 18TH

$500 Set For This Half Of Hancock County

The annual financial appeal for the benefit of the Iowa Children's Home Society will be held in Hancock County beginning October 18th, it was announced this week by Mrs. G. W. Templeton, Garner chairman of the east half of Hancock County.

Established in 1888, the Iowa Children's Home Society provides both emergency and permanent care for neglected, abandoned, mistreated or un-wanted children throughout Iowa, working in close co-operation with the courts, public officials and welfare agencies, and various religious organizations. In its 60 years of service, the Society has cared for nearly 11,000 such children coming from every county in the state. In a single year, under present operation, between 500 and 600 cases come under its sympathetic and humanitarian care.

This year's campaign budget for the state is $135,000, of which $500.00 has been set as half of Hancock County's share.

Mrs. Roswell Gast of Coon Rapids is state chairman of the financial appeal, assisted by the county, rural and city chairman in every county. These, in turn, have enlisted the aid of leading women in every community to solicit for the necessary funds.

The Iowa Children's Society, it is stated by Mrs. Templeton, cares for the children coming under its care through an extensively developed system of foster homes - to institutional or "orphanage" care in that it provides the children with normal, wholesome home environment and trainimng most nearly approximating the desirable conditions in a natural family home. The Society secures the homes and provides funds for the care of the child, taking care of the minimum costs of board, clothing, medical and dental care. It is for this purpose that a large portion of the budget is needed.

The Society also provides the adoptive homes, where this is possible and advisable and conducts an extensive program of service to the unmarried mother and her child. The Society does not maintain an institution other than a receiving residence in Des Moines where children may receive emergency shelter and care until either foster or adoptive homes can be found.

Because Iowa Children's Home Society is widely known and recognized for its very effective and splendid service throughout more than half a century, Mrs. Templeton believes the local goal will be met and probably over-subscribed within a short period. It will be appreciated if everyone will give generously to help meet our quota of only $500.00 for half of Hancock County. A drive will not be conducted through the residential are but we will try to contact everyone through the clubs, organizations and business places.

REPUBLICAN CARAVAN TOURING IOWA

The Republican Caravan has started on a tour through Iowa this week, and the Caravan will make a stop in Garner and Britt. This caravan travels by train, and puts on a show with music at each stop.

The schedule puts them in Britt at 3:30 P. M. and in Garner at 4:30 P. M., Wednesday, October 20th.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Bernadotte's Murder Dramatizes Question of Palestine Before U.N.; East-West Crisis Hits Final Peak

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

HOLY LAND: Murder

The sullen-faced, uniformed men in the jeep didn't say a word after they had stopped the procession of United Nations cars that was winding through the Katamon section of Jerusalem.

Carrying a machine gun, one of them walked up to the automobile in which Count Folke Bernadotte and Col. Andre Pierre Serrot were sitting, looked inside and started shooting.

Bernadotte

The two killers fled, leaving Serrot dead and Bernadotte mortally wounded. The U. N. Palestine mediator died as he was being carried into Hadassah hospital on a stretcher.

For Bernadotte, head of the Swedish Red Cross, nephew of the king of Sweden, diplomat and humanitarian, it was a wretched, futile end.

His death was mourned not only by governments but by millions of ordinary citizens, yet he died not knowing when or if ever his assiduous and sincere efforts to organize peace in the Holy Land would be fulfilled.

Bernadotte's assassination brought Jerusalem—and all of Palestine, for that matter—perilously close to the brink of general violence. There was danger, too, that the uneasy Arab-Jewish truce might fall to pieces under the circumstances.

For the time being, Bernadotte's killers remained unidentified. The Israeli government called it the work of Stern gang terrorists and issued an edict outlawing that extremist group.

In Oslo, Norway, U. N. Secretary-General Trygve Lie added his panegyric to the praise that was being heaped on the martyred Bernadotte:

"He burned with eagerness to bring about an understanding betweens Arabs and Jews. He thought always of justice and peace."

FINAL REPORT: 'End It Now'

As the United Nations general assembly convened for its fateful 1948-49 session in the Palais de Chaillot the member nations took time out to pay somber tribute to Count Folke Bernadotte, their representative in Palestine who had died while trying to implement the peace of which they were supposed to be the architects.

Then they began consideration of the plan for an enforced Palestine settlement that Bernadotte had submitted before his death.

THE SWEDISH COUNT'S final 35,000-word report recommended that the Arab-Jewish war should be "pronounced formally ended." If the Arabs and Jews refuse to make peace, the U. N. should do so itself, the report said.

It calls for changes in the boundaries of the U. N. partition plan adopted in November, 1947, proposing that the Negeb desert be given to the Arabs and that the Jews should receive all of Galilee instead of only the eastern part.

Other recommendations include:

1. INTERNATIONALIZATION of Jerusalem by placing it under U. N. control.

2. ESTABLISHMENT of a technical boundaries commission to delimit the new frontiers.

3. CREATION of a Palestine conciliation commission to deal with population exchanges and supervise other parts of U. N. decisions.

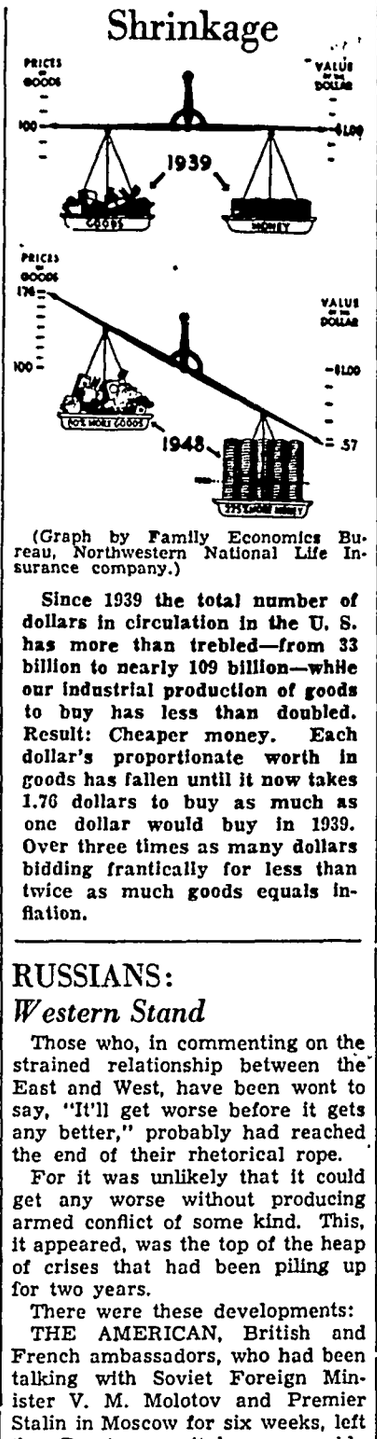
4. SETTLEMENT of the problem of 360,000 Arab refugees by giving them the right to return to their homes in Jewish territory or to receive compensation if they choose not to return.

It was a good plan, the United States thought, and Secretary of State Marshall announced that this nation would back it to the fullest extent. Said Marshall:

"THE UNITED STATES considers that the conclusions contained in the final report of Count Bernadotte offer a generally fair basis for settlement of the Palestine question."

He called it "the best possible basis for bringing peace to a distracted land," adding that "No plan could be proposed which would be entirely satisfactory in all respects to every interested party."

Shrinkage



(Graph by Family Economics Bureau, Northwestern National Life Insurance company.)

Since 1939 the total number of dollars in circulation in the U. S. has more than trebled—from 33 billion to nearly 109 billion—while our industrial production of goods to buy has less than doubled. Result: Cheaper money. Each dollar's proportionate worth in goods has fallen until it now takes 1.76 dollars to buy as much as one dollar would buy in 1939. Over three times as many dollars bidding frantically for less than twice as much goods equals inflation.

RUSSIANS: Western Stand

Those who, in commenting on the strained relationship between the East and West, have been wont to say, "It'll get worse before it gets any better," probably had reached the end of their rhetorical rope.

For it was unlikely that it could get any worse without producing armed conflict of some kind. This, it appeared, was the top of the heap of crises that had been piling up for two years.

There were these developments:

THE AMERICAN, British and French ambassadors, who had been talking with Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov and Premier Stalin in Moscow for six weeks, left the Russian capital, presumably ending the four-power discussions.

THE THREE western powers asked the Kremlin for a simple and final "yes or no" on the question of whether Russia will lift its blockade of Berlin.

U. S. SECRETARY of State George Marshall, speaking before the U. N. general assembly, warned the Soviet Union that American patience should not be mistaken for weakness.

With the Moscow talks at an end the center of action in the crisis had shifted to Paris where the issue would be debated in the U. N.

The western nations—the U. S., France and Great Britain—plainly had had enough and were determined not to give another inch.

In an hour-long speech before parliament, British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin expressed his nation's determination: "We are firmly resolved to go on with our policy.

"I AM NOT SAYING by that that we are committed to war and all the other things that might ensue. We have not reached that stage yet."

Speaking to the United Nations in Paris, George Marshall, U. S. secretary of state, outlined the basic U. S. foreign policy in much the same manner as Bevin. The United States, he said, would not "compromise the essential principles" or "barter away the rights and freedoms of other peoples."

HOME OWNERS: Record High

One of the most maddening of all the modern paradoxes is that while millions of American families are searching desperately for decent places to live, at the same time more American families own their own homes now than ever before in history.

About 49 per cent of the nation's non-farm families owned their homes at the beginning of this year, it has been revealed by a federal reserve board survey. That comes to a total of 18.5 million city and town families.

Although the survey did not take up farm families, the proportion of home owners among that group traditionally has been much higher than among city dwellers.

? Current Events ?

If you haven't been spending all your evenings taking the dog for a walk or fixing the hen house, chances are you've been reading about some of the events on which the following five questions are based. Can you answer them?

1. The United Nations general assembly recently convened in Paris for a 10 or 12-week fall session. What is the name of the elaborate building in which the assembly is meeting?

2. The American, British and French ambassadors who have been conferring with Molotov recently took their leave of Moscow. Can you name them?

3. This year, 16 years after he soared 10 miles into the stratosphere in a balloon, a Belgian scientist-explorer plans to plunge two miles under water to investigate the deep sea world. Who is he?

4. Who is the man who took the assassinated Count Bernadotte's place as U. N. mediator in Palestine?

5. Princess Elizabeth of England was in the world spotlight when she got married last November. Now she is in the news again for a different reason. What is it?

ANSWERS

1. Palais de Chaillot.
2. Walter Bedell Smith (U. S.), Frank Roberts (British), Yves Chataigneau (French).
3. Prof. Auguste Piccard.
4. Ralph Bunche, an American, Bernadotte's assistant.
5. She is expecting a baby in November.

PRICE AID: Sure Thing

One thing is dead sure about the coming election: No matter who gets into office, farm price supports will be continued.

Governor Dewey is on record as favoring the Hope-Aiken law passed by congress last June, and President Truman says he is in favor of farm price supports and has been all along.

BOTH SIDES have promised their help to the nation's farmers.

As a result of the growing amount of light that has been shed upon the idea of price supports there has been a lot of argument as to whether they keep up costs of living in the city and, hence, contribute generally toward inflation.

The system was started in the 1930s to save farmers from bankruptcy caused by surplus production and lack of consumer buying. It accomplished that end.

IT WAS CHANGED during the war to make farmers produce more food than the country needed to feed less fortunate nations who were fighting the Axis. It did that.

After the war this incentive system was continued to keep greater amounts of food flowing into destitute areas abroad. It was successful in that, also.

Now, however, as a result of this artificial stimulation, production is beginning to pile up in the U. S. The wartime pattern of price support no longer fits the American market.

THE POTATO situation is a case in point. As the government continues to stimulate the production of potatoes the guaranteed prices keep consumers from getting the surplus crops at bargain prices, and at the same time the system keeps farmers growing too many potatoes.

Congress this year elected to revise the price support program, effective in 1950, by providing new parity prices based on modern farm practices and by allowing a fluctuation in support levels to conform with general economic conditions.

Dewey and Eggs

In sharp contrast to Henry Wallace's unsavory experience with eggs in the South, the product of the hen brought nothing but good to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, GOP presidential candidate. At his Pawling, N. Y., farm he was made honorary member of the national "Good Egg" club and was presented with an egg-bedecked plaque by Hobart Creighton (left), GOP nominee for governor of Indiana and president of the Poultry and Egg national board.

ANSWER MAN: Brannan

When it comes to questions Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brannan gets all kinds, many of which have nothing to do with farming.

Pouring in at the rate of 3,000 a day, the queries vary from: "How do I bury cats in the ground?" to "What was Little Eva's last name in the play, 'Uncle Tom's Cabin?'" and "Can you recommend a lonely hearts club? Three of us girls are interested."

THERE'S NO EXCUSE

America's Rural Fire Loss Can Be Cut

Although fire prevention week is over for this year, the danger of farm fires is not over and possibly never will be.

But that seeming inevitability is no excuse. As a matter of fact, fire protection experts say, there is no longer any excuse for America's 100-million-dollar annual farm fire loss.

The means to reduce it are available to almost any community that wants to make the effort.

Principal means of cutting rural fire losses, according to the National Board of Fire Underwriters, is a good volunteer fire department, quartered in a small town but serving the surrounding area that has been organized into a fire protection district, such as now is authorized in 39 states.

Washington Social Hours: Cold Turkey, Hot Gossip

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Washington cocktail parties and other social gatherings have been widely publicized as makers and breakers of reputations, national candidacies and international policies.

Not all of these affairs may forge or fracture the destiny of nations, but many often bring together as great a variety of human ingredients as are to be found at any one place at any one time, anywhere.

For example I have just returned from lunch. I probably should say "luncheon" considering what it must have cost my red-headed college mate host whose excuse for giving it was the fact that he was celebrating his 55th birthday but whose real reasons lay beyond distant frontiers. The bearded Italian scientist on his left reminded him that the occasion was unique because it was hardly likely he would celebrate a similar occasion 55 years hence.

BAUKHAGE

A little macabre, I thought, but no one seemed to take it that way—least of all the fellow-citizen of Dante who was enjoying himself immensely over his cold smoked turkey and doubtless became lyric over the lira and other important transalpine institutions before we were through.

On the bearded one's left was a representative of the state department who gave me a disappointingly eye-witness and unsensational account of the recent parliament session of one of our South American neighbors—a session which I had judged from previous dispatches, would be punctuated by revolver shots.

We had heard rumors of mysterious shootings there which were supposed to have made up in political significance what they lacked in marksmanship. Also there had been hints of cabinet changes due not only to mistakes in policy, but to hasty burials. I asked my fellow guest about it.

"Oh, no," he said, "there were no cabinet changes."

"But what about these terrible rumors of graft and corruption?"

"Well, the President in his address did make particular reference to the evils of political corruption and to the importance of selfless loyalty on the part of the servants of the state."

"But was that all?" I persisted. "No names, addresses, or telephone numbers?"

"That was all," he insisted, "It was a very quiet session. Furthermore there was none of the protocol we observe at a joint session of the two houses of the American congress. This parliament was called to order, the President came in, spoke his piece, and went out."

At this point, my host broke in. He insisted that I repeat the story of the opening of this summer's special "turnip" session of congress which nobody outside of a few million radio listeners who happened to be tuned in had heard before.

Legislative Faux Pas, De Luxe Style

This July 26 when a very angry house of representatives was called to order, it was known that the regular chaplain could not appear. So, when a stranger took the rostrum, the less-somnolent members rose, bowed their heads, as is the custom, to listen to the prayer. The first words they heard resounding through the chamber were: "Whereas the public interest requires that the congress of the United States should be convened at 12 o'clock noon on Monday, the twenty-sixth of July, 1948, to receive such communication as may be made by the Executive; Now, therefore, I, Harry S. Truman, President of the United States . . ." and so on. . . .

Gradually the members realized that the man addressing them was not the substitute for the absent chaplain of the house, but the substitute for the equally-absent reading clerk whose duty it is to read bills and official communications.

It was most embarrassing. The voice they were hearing was not the voice of a man repeating the word of God; it was the voice of the substitute clerk repeating the proclamation of the man at whom they were maddest. The members didn't like to make public admission of their error by sitting down, and so they had to stand through the painful 114-word pronouncement which had torn them from the bosom of family and constituency, and brought them back to heat-ridden Washington.

Next to the state department official who had unwittingly provided the excuse for my anecdote was the consul-general of the Philippine republic who happens to be the son of another college classmate of mine. He, like the rest of his family, had outlived the Japanese occupation, and with his sister, had participated in the effective Philippine underground, memories of which made this day's current tragedy of the Philippines—the eruption of Hibokhibok volcano on Camiquin island—a decidedly minor concern.

On my left was a prominent Washington lawyer. During a lull in the discussion of international, if not cosmic affairs, he suddenly asked: "What was your mother's maiden name?"

"Alice Blood," I replied.

"Yes," he nodded in satisfaction, "My aunt, Clara Brown, often told me about your mother. They were classmates (Ingham university '78), and she was a bridesmaid at your mother's wedding in La Salle, Illinois."

Skipping your correspondent around the table, we arrive at a famous scientist. We exchanged reminiscences too, for he also was a graduate of the same college. As we talked, I remembered an anecdote about him I had heard from a mutual college friend.

A Check by Any Other Name . . .

Not many years after his graduation, this scientist and his young wife arrived in the city where our mutual friend was in business, and called on him. The businessman recognized the scientist's face immediately but for the life of him, couldn't remember the man's name

During their lunch, the scientist remarked that he was going on an extended trip into Canada and had unfortunately run out of money. He wondered could he get a check cashed at the businessman's bank. The businessman gladly acquiesced, thinking that when he saw the signature on the check, he would recognize the scientist's name. Together they went to the bank, the scientist wrote the check, and the two men went to the cashier's window. But as the scientist handed in the check, all the businessman could read was the name of a bank in a very distant city and the amount—five hundred dollars.

He had already said to the cashier, "I want you to meet my friend . . " but could get no further. Terribly embarrassed, he turned to the scientist and said: "I'm sorry, but I can't recall your name."

Of course the cashier overheard this remark and with the natural caution of the banker, said to the businessman: "This will be fine, Mr. X, but will you please endorse this?" Mr. X turned it over, noted the name but did not recognize it, trembled to think of what would happen to his bank account if it bounced (and he was sure it would), and signed. Farewells were spoken, the scientist departed. Day after day the businessman awaited the call from the bank.

In fact, he told me he had picked out a space on the wall where he intended to frame the paper so that he could call attention to it casually should some other vaguely identified caller request a similar favor.

Nothing happened.

A month or so later, another college friend came to town. The businessman related the story, describing the scientist and his occupation. Unaccountably his listener burst into laughter.

"Didn't you know," he said between gasps, "That man's technical as well as scientific information which he acquired at school along with his Ars Magister made him a cool million the year after he was graduated?"

At the luncheon there was also a Chinese oil expert who merely listened and an ERP representative who left early.

And now back to my red-headed host. He related the adventure of one of the guests who had been unable to appear. It seems this gentleman had formed a corporation called "World Development, Inc." or something very similar. When my host heard his glowing prospectus, he said, "Aren't you covering a lot of ground."

"Oh, no," said the promoter who since had acquired considerable influence in international affairs, "this is just a subsidiary of the Inter-Planetary corporation."

Then I had to go, so I never knew what master-plan for the rebuilding and exploiting of the nation, the world or the sidereal spaces were discussed or consummated. But I have no doubt you can go a long way in Washington—starting with cold turkey.

Sportlight

by GRANTLAND RICE

YEARS ago the brilliant Alexander Pope wrote: "They had no poet—and they died." He was referring to the dead and decadent empires of the world—"In vain they schemed, in vain they bled. They had no poet and are dead."

Yale, this season, has 320 pounds of poet. If Pope was right, Yale football won't die this fall. "We can still lose all our games and look good," Herman told me.

"Not to the Old Blue," I said. "The Old Blue neither dies nor surrenders."

HICKMAN

"What does he do?" Herman asked.

"He expects you to win a lot of football games with the spirit of Hinkey, Shevlin, Kilpatrick, Pudge Heffelfinger, Clint Frank, Widdy Neale and a few others."

"But I haven't any of these fellows on my team this season," Herman, the poet, said.

This was a big occasion at Yale and New Haven. It was the first time Yale had ever had a poet coaching the team since my old and departed friend, Billy Phelps, tried to help.

"It's no use, Grant," Billy Phelps told me once, "they don't appreciate blockers and passers down here. They are so much more important than poets and philosophers. I only wish they knew."

Mr. Herman Hickman, the greatest guard football ever knew, according to Gen. Bob Neyland and this writer, the poet laureate of the Smoky Mountains, the man who helped to make five great Army lines, now faces only one kink in his happy existence—the game's greatest line coach has no line to coach.

Has Good Backfield

He has a fine backfield, headed by Bull Nadherny, a scrappy hard hitting back—a fine football player. He has Levi Jackson who so far has never lived up to his newspaper headlines—but who is about due.

He has other good backs. He has a high-class center in Yale's scrappy captain, Billy Conway. But where are all those Polish names Howie Odell had—Barzilauskas—Prchlik—plus big Davidson—a fine tackle—and others?

"Don't get me wrong, Grant," Herman said. "This line material I have is game, smart and willing to give its all. I mean that. We'll make 'em respect us, even if we lose every game. We'll win some games and lose some games."

"That's my philosophy of life," I said to Herman. "Take a little—leave a little—but don't ever take it all."

Notre Dame and one or two others can tell you about that. "Don't ever take it all." Life doesn't work that way.

Herman Hickman drew at least one lucky break. He came to Yale at a time when Eli was at its lowest ebb. It must have been at a low ebb since Howie Odell, its coach, left for Washington university, where far western coaches don't believe he is headed anywhere.

Yale, this season, plays this schedule—Brown, Connecticut, Columbia, Wisconsin, Vanderbilt, Dartmouth, Kings Point, Princeton and Harvard.

Yale Doesn't Rate

I don't believe that Yale rates with Wisconsin, Vanderbilt, or Princeton.

Yale should be outclassed by Columbia, Wisconsin, Vanderbilt and Princeton. I understand Brown, Dartmouth and Harvard are far better than a year ago. I know Columbia should be a far better team. I know Princeton will be.

This leaves Herman Hickman of Tennessee, Army and Yale in a tough spot.

The best teams in the Ivy league should be Pennsylvania, Princeton and Columbia. At least they have much the best material. Columbia has the best backfield material—and a pretty good line. Princeton and Pennsylvania have the best all-around stuff.

Penn State and Army should have two of the best teams in the East—with Rutgers and Villanova challenging. Don't sell either short.

But Herman Hickman honestly faces the toughest challenge of the lot. He hasn't two men who could make Columbia or Princeton. And Yale doesn't like to lose.

My suggestion is that Yale give Herman Hickman a chance—and that doesn't mean 1948—1949 any way. I don't believe Yale has ever had a finer coach—or a human being who could mean more to Yale football than Herman Hickman can.

Winning is a good, big part of it. But winning isn't everything. Herman Hickman can do more good for a college losing than most coaches can winning. I mean in the way that counts.

If only winning counts then Notre Dame and Michigan are the only two major colleges left.

The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND — DREW PEARSON

Doubt About Dulles

IT ISN'T being advertised, but Governor Dewey has received some firm but friendly advice from high-up Republicans to think twice before he appoints John Foster Dulles as his secretary of state.

The opposition to Dulles is partly on the ground that he is one of Wall Street's most prominent lawyers, partly because of the disastrous role Dulles played in selling the American public on the now defaulted German bonds prior to 1938 when leading American economists were warning that they would be worthless paper.

One high-up Republican who recently cautioned Dewey about Dulles was Sen. Styles Bridges (Rep., N. H.), chairman of the powerful senate appropriations committee. Bridges raised a new objection, namely Dulles' recommendation of Alger Hiss, alleged Communist, to be chairman of the Carnegie Peace Foundation

The directors of the foundation, Bridges recalled, were lukewarm about Hiss but were pressured into the appointment by Dulles.

"Yes, he did make a mistake on that one," admitted Dewey.

"And he's made too many mistakes," urged Senator Bridges. "He made a terrible mistake regarding the Nazis. We just can't afford to have a man as secretary of state who makes mistakes. The problem of peace is too delicate."

Bridges also reminded Dewey that Dulles might have difficulty in being confirmed by the senate.

"We hope to give you a real majority in the senate in November," the New Hampshire senator explained. "But we may be darn lucky to keep what we've got. If so, and if only two or three Republicans oppose Dulles, then the Democrats will jump in en masse to fight his confirmation. They'll love it."

Dewey countered that Foreign Minister Molotov liked Dulles, and that ironing out our Russian problems was all important."

"He's the only man in America who can get along with Molotov," Dewey told Bridges.

"And, I suppose," quipped Bridges, "that Molotov is a good Republican and wants us to win in November."

In Praise of Bradley

If war should come to beleaguered Berlin, the men at the top of the U. S. army today are among the most competent, human, and civilian-minded that this newsman has seen around the war department in many a year.

This appraisal, by the way, comes from a long-time and vigorous critic of the brass hats

Responsible for this new deal around the Pentagon building are General Eisenhower and his successor, modest Omar Bradley.

It is important for the American public to know that when the daredevil boys of the air forces and the drop-the-bomb-now men of the navy gather at joint chiefs of staff meetings, there is always present one calm conscience who never forgets the 300,000 G.I.s buried under white crosses from Guadalcanal to Sicily.

Take off his uniform and Omar Bradley looks like a college professor. He is quiet, gracious, generous, good natured and basically a very plain person. Everybody who ever worked with Bradley remarks on his simplicity. His mess sergeant in France had orders never to use Bradley's name to wangle food for headquarters. Once during the historic landing at Normandy, Bradley, then a three-star general, took off his fleece-lined jacket and handed it to a shivering corporal.

"Here, son," he said. "It will be easier for me to get another than it will be for you."

Spunky Mr. Truman

Spunky Harry Truman isn't being discouraged by the Roper poll which concedes him no chance to win. Talking to the District of Columbia Truman-Barkley committee the other day, he declared:

"We won't lose this campaign for lack of hard work. I intend to make more public appearances and wage the most strenuous campaign any president has ever attempted. I'm not only going to make radio appeals to the man in the street—I'm going to rub shoulders with him."

His chief worry, the President confided, was the possibility of a light vote.

"We'll need a heavy vote and I'm going out to get it if I have to punch doorbells," the President said. "If every Democratic precinct committeeman throughout the country operates on that theory, we'll be all right."

That even goes for the District of Columbia, Truman told his D. C. callers, led by Al Wheeler, a Washington attorney.

"Citizens of the District can't vote, but there's a big potential absentee vote here that could be mighty important," explained the President.

The European Beat:

If you want to see the American foreign correspondents in Europe, you'll find them in the Savoy Grill in London, at 21 Rue de Berri in Paris, the American Press club in Berlin, the Park hotel in Frankfurt, the Hotel de la Paix in Geneva, the Grand Bretagne in Athens and the Stampa Estera in Rome. If you stand close enough to their elbows, the chances are they'll be talking about:

The preparations of the Swiss general staff for a Russian airborne attack in the dead of winter. It may never come, but every Swiss male over 16 has an army-issue rifle within reach. . . . The way General Clay is working himself into an early grave—at his desk before eight in the morning until midnight, when he goes home with a sheaf of papers in his briefcase. He not only administers U. S. policy in Germany, he's got to make it up as he goes along. Washington gives him as much guidance as a seeing-eye dog with cataracts and a broken leg

The growing exhaustion of our air force pilots who've been flying the Berlin route since June 21. They see Yaks in their sleep as well as in the air. . . . Lt. Gen. Curtis LeMay, the "lift" commander, who made his reputation by never asking his pilots to do anything he wouldn't do himself. Every few days he walks out to "the circle" like any second louie and flies a freight plane to Berlin—just to see for himself how the thing is working.

The anti-Semitism of Ernest Bevin, whose personal hate is the best known political fact in London. Some of his best friends call him a "gutersnipe anti-Semite"—as opposed, it is presumed, to the more gentlemanly species. . . . The confidential Labor party report that if a general election took place today, Attlee would be returned by a margin of less than 25 seats in the Commons, which makes the next election (scheduled for 1950) an even money proposition.

The "de facto" appointment of Montgomery as commander-in-chief (in addition to Britain's army) of the French, Belgian and Dutch armies. No appointment was necessary; they merely accept his military leadership—as the world automatically accepted FDR's diplomatic leadership. . . . The Duchess of Kent's private crush on Danny Kaye. (My word, so unregal!)

The Vatican's intelligence system, which has superseded the British as the most effective in Europe. No other chancellery knows as much about what's going on inside Russia. . . . Marshal Tito's sudden generosity with visas for American correspondents to work out of Belgrade. He feels safer with America's free press looking on—just in case the Russians start a roughhouse inside the country.

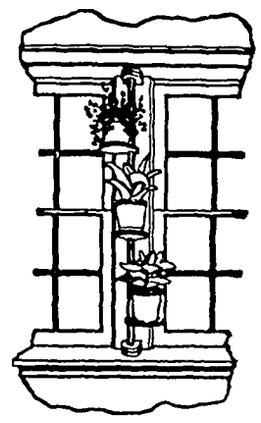
Lucky Luciano's quick and frequent round trips between Rome and Naples, apparently on urgent business—but nobody knows what business and he isn't telling. . . . Rome's Excelsior hotel which looks like a branch office of the 20th Century-Fox administration building—except that the Hollywood place hasn't Orson Welles standing out in front like a cigar store Indian. . . . Jack Warner's heavy losses in the European casinos during August—ninety thousand bux, they say, one night. (Only the brave chemin de fer, said R. E. Sherwood. Or was it Woollcott?)

The Norman Mailer best-seller, "The Naked and the Dead," which has the former war correspondents green with envy. The trained seals saw it all but left it to a GI to write the masterpiece. . . . The offhours literary activity of the American correspondents in Italy (everybody is writing a novel) since Lionel Shapiro (ex-CBS man in Rome) struck Hollywood gold with two books in a row. . . . The modesty of Homer Bigart who, despite the fact that he regularly scoops the pants off every foreign correspondent, is the most beloved guy in the business. . . . The talented toughness of Wes Gallagher, AP's Berlin chief, who has worn the same scowl practically since birth. His nickname: Laughing Boy.

Confirmation from high Czech sources (now in the American zone) of the details of Masaryk's death. Trapped by Gottwald's gestapo as he was about to leave his office for a flight to freedom—he shot four of the secret cops before backing out of the window to his death. . . . The flood of French big business money flowing into DeGaulle's treasury because it is now a 1-10 bet that he'll be the leader (not the premier) of France. . . . The Russian drunk (a colonel) at a party in Vienna, who mumbled: "Nobody can afford a war except the Soviet Union. What have we got to lose?"

The ex-German sergeant, just returned to Frankfurt from three years as a Soviet war prisoner who estimates that 15 per cent of the men in his outfit have become Communists.

Novel Plant Stand Fills Wide Windows



THE plant stand illustrated above is as practical as it is decorative. The attractive arrangement of potted plants not only breaks the monotony of a wide or corner window but also provides a light and healthy place in which to keep plants indoors.

The full size pattern offered below provides an easy method for making and attaching this plant holder. User merely traces pattern on material specified, saws and assembles as pattern indicates.

Any fourteen-year-old boy can build this stand in an evening's time from scrap lumber that can be purchased in any lumber yard.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE STATUE OF LIBERTY

By Ray Jorgenson, Jr.

On my vacation trip through the Eastern part of the country, we visited many sights that are nationally known. The Statute of Liberty is a welcome sign for all ships docking in New York City; and it is visited by thousands of people. It is erected on a small island, which is a fifteen minute ride from the mainland by boat. This national known area was strictly an eye-sore! The island is very poorly kept, some grass, and some weeds, a couple of shack-buildings on the back side, and also a run-down dock at the back. The people running the soft drink and lunch stand were very rude, and the building was dirty.

I believe the Statue of Liberty and the island and buildings should be cleaned up. After all, it is a land-mark of our country; and a welcome to all people from abroad.

HI-SCHOOL HI-LIGHTS

Last Friday night we had an all high school party in honor of the freshmen. To start the party we had a scavenger hunt, which carried us all over town. Now you people that in town that thought we were crazy, know what it was all about. What we mean is everyone running around hunting for the craziest things. When we got back from the scavenger hunt we initiated the freshmen. What about the blindfolded banana feed four of them had to do? Three had to roll peanuts across the stage with their nose and two girls had to hold two boys and feed them water out of a bottle with a nipple on them. They then branded K's on the bottom of their feet with red hot rods (ice, that is). After the iniation we had a dance and a fine lunch, and I think every one had a woderful time.

Monday is the end of the first six weeks of school. It sure doesn't seem like it when you think back, but when you start studying for all the tests you realize and right quick.

In Advanced Home Ec., the senior girls are studing a unit on serving breakfasts. I think that they are really going to have to watch their deit now because they have to eat 2 breakfasts. They are making breafast in the labratory and have to eat everything they make. I really feel sorry for most of them and I'm glad that they don't feed it to the boys of the Senior class.

SENIOR INTERVIEW

Wiliford Back—The casanova of the class was born June 7, 1932. His hair is brown and his eyes are green. He is 5 ft. 11 in. tall. His favorite song is, "Smoke Smoke that Cigarette. This does not mean anything Patterson. Wilfords hobby is necking and his favorite pastime is sleeping. I wonder which he does the most of? Wilford, or "Bill" as the class call him, has beautiful curly, hair that is iresistable to the girls. More power to you, "Bill". His preference in girls is blodes, as we can plainly tell by his choice, N. G.

INQUIRING REPORTER

What do you think of girls wearing slacks to school?

Mr. Patterson: I think that it is a popular custom around here and I have no objections.

Ardell Rosendahl: I definately don't like them since girls forget their manner when they wear slacks.

Don Finders: They look nice on most girls, but I don't think they should wear men's overalls.

Harley Barz: It doesn't make any difference, but they look better in dresses.

Larry Fjetland: I think it is alright.

THIRD AND FOURTH NEWS

We now have thirty-four in our room. Carol Mae and Dennis Reed are new pupils. They are in the third grade.

Several plants have been brought to school. So far we have had fresh flowers in our room.

The third graders upon completing a unit on communtiy helpers, have taken two excursions to the creamery and post office. We enjoyed these trips very much.

The fourth graders in their study of Norway, summarized it into four F"—farms, fiords, forests, and fishing.

There are four passengers in our dental train. They are Gordon Johnson, the engineer, Vernadeen TerHark, Linda Swalve and Connie Jo Bisom.

GOSSIP!!

In Klemme High School we have a new trend. Girl takes boy home. Don't we, I. G.?

P. B., did A. H. get tired of writing?

Is it the new custom in Klemme High for Senior boys to wear their T shirts inside out?

SPORTS

The Shamrocks had their first home game Tuesday with Crystal Lake. In the first part of the game, it looked as if they would come out on top, but the game ended at the fifth inning with the Shamrocks behind. Crystal Lake took the game eight to four. There are still a few games to be played this fall yet.

The basketball season will begin about the last part of Oct. Pat has ordered some basketball shoes and other things so that when practice starts the boys will all be ready to go.

How to Celebrate Your Wedding Anniversary

e "Dutch" Millers celebrated Tin Wedding Anniversary day. Everything had to be tin. even ate off tin plates, and coffee out of tin cups.

Then it was time to drink a to the "bride and groom," came the final touch: ice cold in cans. And come the Millers' anniversary (Glass) I expect be toasting them with sparbeer in bottles!

Dad I couldn't help thinking there was a lesson for married in the way Dutch and his missus have got along together—in their policy of live-and-let-live, with never a criticism of each other's differences in taste.

From where I sit, it's due to two things: Temperance—as that moderate preference for beer suggests, and Tolerance—for their own differences of opinion—and for the tastes of others, whether applied to beer, to politics, or how to celebrate an anniversary.

What goes on here?

Referee makes first down — or did he really just miss it? Field judge blocks out the nearest tackler—or was it clipping? If the officials call 'em — and play too — what kind of a game is that?

You wouldn't stand for that sort of thing on a football field — but it happens every day in the electric light and power business Government not only regulates the electric companies — but is in competition with them at the same time!

The catch is that government sets up two different sets of rules. Government electric agencies pay little or no interest on borrowed money, and pay no Federal taxes—but electric companies do; and expect to When government-in the-power-business can't make ends meet—it gets a handout of tax money from the U. S. Treasury. Who foots the bill? American taxpayers — of which you are one.

If government can get into the light and power business this way — it can get into every other business in just exactly the same way.

In sixty-odd years, the self-supporting electric companies have built for America the most and the best electric service in the world. While costs of everything else are way up (including the costs of making and delivering electricity) electric service is still the best bargain in the American family's budget ... it does so much, and costs so little.

This is a good record for the thousands of people who work in power companies, and for the millions of people who invest savings in them.

Don't you think these men and women deserve a fair break?

The answer is yours to make, for government money is your money.

THE MET AND THE MOVIES

The Metropolitan opera, it is announced, has been in conference with Hollywood on the presentation of grand opera on the screen. Okay here, but we want a promise there will be no "Son of Gotterdammerung"

Grand opera could use a wider audience. Things are not in proper balance when millions of people hear Looney Tunes and only thousands hear "Samson and Delilah." Or when sweater girls, Kashmir travelogues and Disney mean more to the masses than Bach, Pagliacci, Lily Pons and the big scene in "Tannhauser."

The movie fans might like opera. They could be in a mood when anything on the screen that offers relief from shrieking limousine brakes, gunfire and people in shower baths would be mighty welcome. Not to mention love scenes in hayfields and episodes in the Casbah.

Hollywood could do much for grand opera, by the same token It would at least scrap the old scenery and see that costumes fitted.

And it would see that the westerns took place on the screen and not in the lobby or bar.

However, we warn the Met that it had better be on its guard lest the Hollywood influence go too far. We would hate to see the announcements of "Madam Butterfly" or "Carmen" carry the lines "Free Comic Books for the Boys and Girls! Special Exhibit of Tommyguns in the Lobby! Don't Miss the Saturday Night Jackpot!"

We have grave fears of billings such as these:

"'Tristan and Isolde,' a Warner Brothers' Super Special! With Woody Herman's Orchestra on Stage."

"Goldwyn Does It Again With 'Peleas and Melisande!' Don't Miss the Stage Presentation of La Scala Days! Free Dishes!"

"'Cavalleria Rusticana!' A Republic Pictures Production! Watch Your Neighborhood Theater News for Further Details! With the Added Feature 'Billy the Kid.'"

"Starting Today: The 'Barber of Seville!' Starting Thursday 'The Big Murder at Triple Bar Ranch!'"

"All This Week Beethoven! All Next Week George Raft."

But what this department fears most is one of those Hollywood screen preludes with all the credit lines, viz:

Let's have a little co-operation between the movie and the opera, but don't go too far, boys!

Bells, Bells, Bells

Elmer Twitchell, an old-time hook and ladderman himself, is upset by the order cutting down the bell alarms in New York fire houses, following a decision that it makes firemen victims of hypertension and cardiac troubles. "On paper it sounds logical," declared Elmer, "but in practice it is no good. Fire bells keep a fireman tense and sleepless? Bunk. On the contrary an old timer can't get a wink of sleep when deprived of 'em."

"Those younger fire laddies may find bells a nuisance, but older smoke eaters were raised on 'em. Their hypertension will go up 50 per cent the first night they are expected to sleep without 'em. Mark my words, with the bells cut out a week, you will find the fire department close to a nervous collapse."

The Buffalo Philharmonic offers to supply baby sitters to all purchasers of season tickets. This removes the last excuse for not having a big family.

VANISHING AMERICANISMS
"Let's be fair about this. . . ."

"If we are wrong we'll gladly say so. . . ."

"The boss ain't a bad guy at heart. . . ."

Ed Kobak, head man of Mutual Broadcasting, announces that after January 1 all his programs requiring that listeners answer a telephone to win prizes will be abandoned. "I think legally these shows cannot be banned," he says. "But the important thing is for a man to be right with himself, and not just consider what he can get by with." What! Can there really be a figure in American entertainment who is for getting back to old-fashioned ethics?

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

NO SONG IS LOST

By C. S. MONTAYNE

MARIO went through the cool, cloistered half light of the living room in Edna's Amarillo Canyon bungalow and sat down before her baby grand piano in the workroom where the shade of the trees outside lay in thick, green dusk. He swept aside a heap of Edna's penciled manuscript, smiling a little superciliously, for her composing efforts invariably amused him, and let his thin, nervous fingers roam the keys.

Usually melody soothed away any inner disturbance. But this afternoon, his talk with Hammond at the studio lingered unpleasantly. He found himself playing the elusive, fragmentary tune that had been in his mind for some days. He had thought it might be pointed up, hammered into a production number that could be played straight or used to satisfy the jittery inhibitions of the swing-minded. Hammond had set a deadline for the thing he wanted. He had been very decided when he told Mario the song, words and music, must be in by the next afternoon.

But he reminded himself, men like Hammond weren't contracting for her to write arias and spot hit numbers for the type of picture, and the operatic star, on which he had been at work.

Mario was embroidering the theme, trying to give it substance and body, when he heard Edna's car outside. Her Great Dane barked joyfully, the iron gate banged shut, her heels clicked rhythmically on the polished floor

"I thought I heard you playing Been here long?" Her slim hand slipped into his "I looked for you at the studio. Hammond said you left at one."

Her hair seemed to glimmer in the light and shadow; her long, oval eyes were mysteriously enigmatic, her full lips parted. At that moment Mario decided again that she was lovely—lovely enough to excite romance, to thrill and inspire him.

He wondered, abstractly, while he lighted a cigarette, why he wasn't in love with her. Perhaps it was that strange superiority he felt—the constant knowledge that he had come to Hollywood from the concert stage, that the music he wrote was good, so much better than the banal, tinkling tunes Edna laboriously ground out. It was true she had earned a great deal of money and fame of a sort from the full length cartoon comedy she had set to music But he reminded himself, men like Hammond weren't contracting for her to write arias and spot hit numbers for the type of picture, and the operatic star, on which he had been at work.

They dined on the terrace. The moon swung up across the canyon and the stars came out, one by one. Mario, lounging in the candlelight, told her his troubles.

"Tomorrow afternoon . . . am I an automaton to have a crank turned . . . and music come out? That song I was playing—" He gestured with his thin, artistic hands. "It is what Hammond wants, I know that, but—"

"It fades into nothing," Edna interpolated softly.

He nodded, deep in thought, hardly conscious she had gotten up and gone into the bungalow. He lifted his brooding gaze when he heard the ripple of the piano. He jerked his head sharply left, his eyes on the open doors, listening.

She was playing the same tune he had toyed with when she had come in. But this time the melody had a meaning, a significance. It built itself in a melodic tone picture that gripped him and held him fascinated. The middle part that had hung suspended, escaping him completely, was now a bridge that carried the burden of the theme surely across to its exquisite climax.

"Something like that?"

Edna came back through the cloying gloom. Mario stood, his young face earnest and intent, his hands trembling.

"Yes, something like that."

"Go in and write it down before you forget it." She spoke casually.

"Pencil and score sheets on top of the piano. Help yourself."

"But—"

She pushed him away, gently, decidedly. "Hurry, before it goes."

Brennan, who was doing the lyrics, put words to the melody the next morning in Mario's hotel room. At noon Hammond heard the song, approved, and took Mario out to lunch.

"Funny how a little urging can get you artistic guys underway," he grunted. "Frankly, I don't like highbrow musicians. I'd rather work with the Tin Pan Alley variety—people like Edna Sheridan, Tommy Dorlon. But that's a good tune. Sounds like a natural."

It was after five when Mario's taxi took him to Amarillo Canyon. The Great Dane barked ominously when he opened the iron gate, but the dog was chained and Mario went on to the letter-box and key Edna left for him. There was a note saying she'd be back in an hour, on the living room table, an open manuscript on the piano rack. Mario saw its title, "No Song Is Lost," when he switched on the shaded light and sat down to play.

SHE had raided a Los Angeles delicatessen. When she put her car in the garage, she called for him to help her with the packages. Mario carried them in to the glistening porcelain table in the model kitchen.

He looked deep into the enigmatic eyes Edna lifted. He tried to answer her smile, but his lips were stiffly serious. She frowned, watching his expression change dramatically.

"What did Pete Hammond think of the number? Why do you look at me like that, Mario? What's the matter? Something gone wrong?"

"Very wrong!" He was trembling oddly, the blood was pounding through him, his mind was confused. Only one thing had any clarity, any vision. "Why, Edna?" he heard himself asking in a strange voice.

"Why—what?"

His hands closed about her shoulders. He was drawing her to him, hardly aware of what he did. "That song," Mario said all at once. "No wonder it was elusive, haunting! I must have heard it here the first night I came! It must have hidden in some far corner of my memory! It was your song—the theme piece you did for that cartoon nonsense—so good you took it out, shelved it! Why, Edna—?"

He broke off. She was close to him now and quite naturally, simply, her arms linked themselves about his neck. And she was smiling, not enigmatically, but happily.

"What is the theme of all music, of all life?" she asked, unsteadily.

Mario laughed. "Love, of course!" he told her, before he put his own arms around her and leaned to kiss the warm red of her curved, glowing mouth.

WISE GUISE

You guessed it, this is about those characters with crew cuts at one end and argyle socks (the ones you knit for them) on the other—boys, that is. Everybody knows that their latest fashion favorite is the collarless cardigan sports jacket, a la Sinatra, but only our hi style scouts could round up their latest fads—and only you would be interested in them

Boys and Curls — Frankie Laine isn't the only one who can sing, "Just Because My Hair Is Curly," now that a new wave has swept over the high school boys—a Permanent Wave, we mean. Seems out in the Middle West they're letting the front of their hair grow long and then curling it with those home permanent sets. Well, a forelock comes in handy when you have to honor your partner in square dancing.

News in Neckwear—The latest fad with his T shirts is a cotton bandanna kerchief, worn around the neck and slipped through a ring in front—preferably a friendship ring with a sentimental inscription. Looks as if he's been influenced by your silk scarfs.

Close Shave — Although we don't like to believe it, one of our Oklahoma scouts declares that the latest fad among the local Big Wheels is to shave their heads completely. Serves us right for complaining about their Crew Cuts. How hideous can they get, is what we'd like to know? Maybe we'd better not try to find out; there are times when "It Pays to Be Ignorant."

Hose for Joes—Miniature argyle socks are the latest good-luck trophies to hang in their jalopies. Of course, they're made by their favorite Needle Nudgers. And, boys who have big collections of hand-knit argyles, are now wearing different patterns and colors together, instead of matching pairs. Such a dazzling display!

Added Attraction — As if Spike Jones recordings didn't shatter the air waves enough, some disc jockeys have discovered that they can add their own sound effects to records with hilarious — and noisy—results. Wait 'til you hear what they do with the "Bells of San Juanita!" In comparison, "My Old Flame" is a lullaby!

• • •

Minor Detail.

From now on when we chance to meet,
I'll turn my head and cross the street.
The things he said, I can't forget,
I'll cut him dead—with no regret.
I can't forgive our bitter brawl,
His insults are beyond recall—
The only point on which there's a doubt
Is what our quarrel was about.

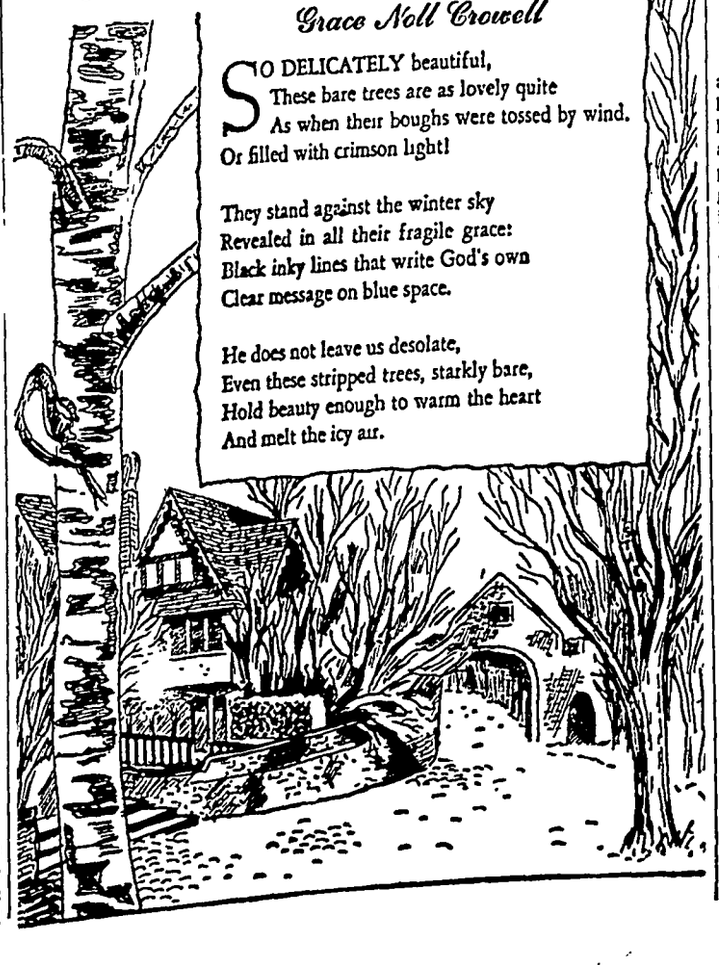
Bare Trees

Grace Noll Crowell

SO DELICATELY beautiful,
These bare trees are as lovely quite
As when their boughs were tossed by wind,
Or filled with crimson light!

They stand against the winter sky
Revealed in all their fragile grace:
Black inky lines that write God's own
Clear message on blue space.

He does not leave us desolate,
Even these stripped trees, starkly bare,
Hold beauty enough to warm the heart
And melt the icy air.



THE BIBLE SPEAKS

International Uniform Sunday School Lessons

DEVOTIONAL READING. Psalms 19:7-14.

Life and Law

Lesson for October 17, 1948

YOU, friend reader, probably know less about what is in the books of Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy than any other part of the Bible. These are the sections mostly filled with laws—"Thou shalt . . . Thou shalt not." You either skip these entirely or you say to yourself, "Well, that has nothing to do with me." If so, you have been missing one of the most interesting sections of the Bible.

Dr. Foreman

Some of these old laws are dead; but even a mummy can be interesting Call them dead if you like; you still can learn a great deal about the times and the minds and the customs of those far-off days by reading the laws which governed people's daily lives.

But it is hardly fair to call them dead. Rather, they have been honorably retired. That is to say, they were admirable laws in their time and place, and God's will was learned through them.

The Living Soul of Law

THERE are two ways of looking at any law, or you might say there are two sides of every law, the inside and the outside, the soul and the body as it were. The body, the outside, is the letter of the law; the inside or soul of the law is the spirit or principle of the law.

The body of the law, like the body of a man, dies; it is not intended to live on and on. But the soul of the law (if it has one, some don't) lives forever.

Take, for instance, that law in Lev 19.9, 10 The body of it, the letter, says: Do not be efficient in getting in your crops. Leave some wheat in the field. Leave some grapes on the vine.

Today that sounds rather stupid, on the face of it, and no good farmer would pay attention to it. But look at the spirit of that law: the wheat and the grapes were to be left for "the poor and the stranger" There was then no Red Cross, no bureau of displaced persons, no traveler's aid, no family service, no social security, none of our many modern agencies for the underprivileged. Those who had property were bidden to have a care for those who had none.

The duty of society to see that no one starves, the duty of all to help those in need, that is the living soul of this law, and it still breathes in laws of the 20th century—laws of old age assistance, maternity assistance, pension plans and so forth.

The living soul of the Old Testament laws can be expressed this way: The love of justice and the justice of love The best and wisest laws today are those which give this same spirit its fullest and most practical form.

Jesus' Last Word

THE Jews figured out that there were in all 613 separate commandments in all the laws combined They used to have interesting debates as to which of all the 613 commandments was the most important.

They came to Jesus with that well-worn question. Jesus quoted only two laws, one from Deut. 6:5 and the other from Lev. 19:18. Love God, love your neighbor, he said. All the other laws depend on these two.

To this day, Christian thinkers are not entirely agreed as to just how far Old Testament laws may be binding on Christians. But all are agreed on two points: The basic principle of these laws is always good, and that fundamental principle is love.

Love Is Not Repealed

THIS is what Christians mean when they say that the laws of God are eternal. We do not mean that every law between the covers of the Bible can and should be used as the law of our land today.

What we do mean is that the spirit of these laws is immortal, for the spirit is love, and love never has been repealed.

Show me a law which helps the strong at the expense of the weak, a law which encourages cheating and selfishness and fighting, and I will show you a bad law. Show me a law which encourages and helps men to deal fairly with one another and to live together in peace, and I will show you a good law. Every law that helps you love your neighbor is a good law; indeed there is something divine about it, for God is Love.

Household Hints

Do not leave your camera in the glove compartment of your car. The heat has ruined many feet of good film.

Did you know that when evaporated milk is mixed with an equal amount of water it has the same food value as bottled milk and may be used in the same way?

Mending should be attended to before clothes are washed. Unchecked rips and tears grow bigger and shaggier during the washing process.

Many people do not know the principal difference between salad dressing and mayonnaise. Salad dressing contains starch, mayonnaise does not.

Cut a circle from a piece of waxed paper, making it one inch smaller than the plate on which you frost a cake. This will keep the plate clean while frosting.

A jar of soap jelly made from scraps melted in hot water will do more than save soap. It makes it easier to wash as you go when baking, because you can just dip a brush into the jelly and clean up odd pieces without bothering to get out the dishpan.

When you've scoured the bathtub to gleaming whiteness, dash in a spoon of soap jelly, add a little water, and swish it about with a long-handled brush. This will remove the last persistent grains of cleanser, which sometimes can't be seen but are certainly felt when you bathe.

County Contributes To Record ISC Enrollment

Of the record-breaking 10,069 students enrolled at Iowa State college 33 come from Hancock County, figures released by J R. Sage, registrar, showed today

The Hancock County group includes 2 freshmen; 11 sophomores; 9 juniors; 9 seniors; and 2 graduate or special students.

Total enrollment at the College this year has shown an increase of 312, compared to last year. Greatest increase is in the Division of Agriculture which has 2,457 students during the present fall quarter Increases were also shown in the Division of Science with 1,875, and the Division of Veterinary Medicine with 280. Agricultural engineering students, who take work both in Agriculture and Engineering now number 217, another increase. Slight decreases have been shown in the Division of Engineering which is still the largest with 3,694 students; and the Division of Home Economics which has 1,546.

Men outnumber women students by more than four to one. There are 8,165 men and 1,934 women.

Iowa State's record enrollment was achieved in spite of a drop in enrollment among veterans attending under the G I. Bill of Rights. Last year there were 5,596 during the fall quarter. This year there are 5,126.

Hancock County Citizens Still Tops In Tax Payments

Roy L. McMillin, County Treasurer of Hancock County has just checked the Tax lists for the County and finds that the collections for 1948 are ahead of former years.

The total tax collected this year amounts to $927,871.57. Collections to October first are $888,500.18.

This amounts to 95.75 percent of the total and with still two months to go The ballance due in the first part of November will have to be advertised and the Tax sale will be held on December 6th.

During the past five years we have been able to clean up the taxes before the advertised list, thus saving costs and penalty for the tax payer. Now is the time to check over your checks and know your tax has been paid.

This has been a heavy year for Drainage and the total collected to date amounts to $117,402.77, there are several new districts being established and most of these will be collected with the spring tax.

Hancock County has never had a better year, all crops are far above average and prices have held steady. New license plates for cars and trucks now on hand, they are aluminum plates and will go on sale Dec 1st.

With conditions as they now are we can see no reason why we would not have all tax collected before the date set for publication. Help us to do this and make it 100 percent.

L. E. AVERY DIED OCT. 12TH

Funeral Services Were Held On Thursday Afternoon, Oct. 14 At Goodell U. B. Church

Laton Emmett, son of Laton and Emma Avery was born on a farm northeast of Goodell Feb 21, 1878, and passed away at his home October 12th, 1948

When Laton was quite young both his parents passed away and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Anson Avery raised him.

In 1889 Laton was united in marriage to Theresa E. Lister of Belmond To this union one son, Anson E. of Goodell, was born. Laton has one grandchild, Lois Ann Avery of Goodell.

Laton was a kind and loving husband and father and very devoted to his home He was well known as a great lover of nature and the great out of doors, and will be missed as an honest and upright citizen and member of the community

"Tis but a wish, a thought a prayer, That when life's journey's done, When all life's battles have been fought, And the last great victory won, May there be waiting on the shore Of that better, brighter land, The ones who have crossed death's dark sea o'er, The faithful of our band, Though we have missed them day by day, Since, they have entered into rest, 'Tis ours, though with a sorrowing heart, To say, "God knowest best."

Funeral services were held on Thursday afternoon, October 14 at 2 o'clock at the Goodell Evangelical and United Brethren Church, in charge of the pastor, Rev. W. T. Boston. Burial was in the Goodell cemetery.

Mrs. Henry Brede and Mrs Louise Johnson sang, "The Old Rugged Cross" and "Beyond The Sunset."

Casket bearers were Joe Burgess, Sumner Fuller, Dale Brede, Harry Trumbell, Raymond Hofer, and Henry Dieger.

The U-Delt-Em Bridge Club met at the home of Mrs. Art Kudje on Thursday afternoon. Lunch was served to the club members and three prizes were given. Mrs. Fred Arnold, high; Mrs. W. F. Missman, second high; and Mrs. Wm. Fuss third high.

BARZ - JOHNSON SPEAK VOWS

Miss Ihlajean Johnson, daughter of Mr and Mrs. Henry Johnson of Miami, Oklahoma and Allen K. Barz, son of Mrs. Clara Barz of Klemme were united in marriage Sunday evening, Oct. 17, 1948 at 7:00 o'clock in the Klemme Evangelical and Reformed Church, the Rev Calvin Grosshuesch officiating. The bride was attended by her sisters, Betty and Katherine Johnson; and the groom was attended by Bill Grosshuesch and Edward Barz. Carroll Johnson, younger sister of the bride, was flower girl, and Leland Barz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Barz, was ring bearer

Mr. and Mrs. Allen Barz are spending this week on a wedding trip in Wisconsin, and will return home Sunday.

The Times will carry a full item on the wedding next week along with a picture of the couple. Due to difficulties we could not obtain the picture by press time this week.

ELWOOD HARVEY ASSIGNED DUTIES IN PARIS

Mr and Mrs. H. E. Harvey received word last week that Elwood Harvey was given an appointment to serve as cryptographer with the American Embassy in Paris for a period of two years. This service will include work with the United Nations. Elwood left Washington D. C. by plane Monday afternoon and arrived in Paris at 8:00 a m Tuesday morning of this week. He has not re-enlisted but is on extended service and will live as a civilian while in Paris. The government also furnished him with a $300 wardrobe which included four new suits, two topcoats, new shirts and accessories. This all was quite an honor to Elwood.

Mrs. Keraus had a birthday party Tuesday night which was her 81st birthday. Mrs. Mary Waterman, Mrs. Herman Bridges, Mrs. Clara Barz, Mrs. Lena Schroeder, Lydia Bock and Esther Barz were all guests of the occassion A nice lunch was served and Mrs. Keraus received many nice gifts from her friends.

BIRTHDAY BASKET DINNER AT GOODELL

A birthday basket dinner was enjoyed at the home of Rev and Mrs. W T Boston in Goodell last Sunday. Most everyone arrived in time to attend the morning service at the Evangelgal United Brethren Church where Rev Boston is pastor

Those present for the birthday dinner were Mr and Mrs. W. B Richardson and granddaughter Jeanett Richardson of Stilson; Mr Jerald Richardson of Britt; Mr. and Mrs. Russel Richardson and Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Lee of Forest City; Mr and Mrs. Daniel Landheer and Miss Adra Landheer of Buffalo Center; Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Richardson and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Richardson of Des Moines, and Mr and Mrs. W. GREIMAN & SONS ENTER SHOW

ADDIS GREIMAN AND SONS FIRST TO REGISTER FROM HANCOCK COUNTY

First from Hancock County to register entries for the 49th International Live Stock Exposition are Addis Greiman and Sons of Garner They will show a purebred Aberdeen-Angus steer in the steer classes of the show which is scheduled for November 27 through December 4th in the Chicago Stock Yards.

The livestock departments of the show will have classes for both fat and breeding cattle and sheep, fat swine; draft horses; and the Junior Livestock Feeding Contest for boys and girls.

The International Horse Show with several spectacular new features and the 26th annual Grain and Hay Show are several more major events of the many entertaining and educational features of the International which will attract an expected half a million people from throughout the continent.

Entries for the show will close November 1, for all livestock classes except the fat carlots which close November 20, and grain show entries close Nov. 10. Premium lists and entry forms are available at show headquarters at the Chicago Stock Yard.

The "Jolly Workers" club met on Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. Melvin Pearson. Two visitors and 15 members were present. The time was spent packing a Christmas box for the Holland family. After a social time lunch was served with Mrs. Verner Nelson as co-hostess. Mrs. Paul Kramer will be the hostess for the November meeting.

ROY L. McMILLIN ATTENDS MEETING IN NEBRASKA FOR MARCH OF DIMES

Polio Cases For 1948 Over The 18,000 Mark And Going Up In Many States

With an alarming upswing in new polio cases this country now faces its most serious crises in the relentless fight against infantile paralysis Roy L. McMillin of Garner declared today.

First hand reports from a regional meeting of March of Dimes Campaign directors in Lincoln, Nebraska which Mr. McMillin attended because of the emergency of the situation included: Polio cases for 1948 are already over the 18,000 mark and with the rise continueing in many states there is fear that the year's total may exceed 28,000. The worst epidemic year in history was 1916 when 27,363 cases were charted.

Instead of tapering off substantially with the advent of fall, polio is still raging in many states including this area, and urgent calls for outside aid from the National Foundation are continueing every day.

For this reason plans to hold the greatest March of Dimes drive in all the years of polio fight were discussed at the Lincoln meeting, about 200 March of Dimes workers attended the sessions held at the Cornhusker Hotel.

This is a black year for polio, but we were deeply impressed with what March of Dimes money has done and is doing this year to fight the crippling desease So far as is known, not one case of polio has failed to receive the utmost medical care even in states so desperately hit by this desease.

We are told of the experience of North Carolina where the Polio outbreak has cost $3,000,000 for medical care alone and where the loss to the state in trade and business totals over $40,000.00.

There is a big job to be done for the March of Dimes to restore the depleted funds but we know the people will respond when called upon and do their full share.

Attend Football Game At Minneapolis

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Jennings and Ray spent last week end in Minneapolis and attended the Minnesota-Illinois football game with Mr. and Mrs. Rollie Fingerson of Spencer, Iowa; Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Schulze of Rochester, Minn.; and Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Van Winkle of Aberdeen, South Dakota.

Mrs. Fingerson, Mrs. Schulze and Mr. Van Winkle are sisters and brother of Mrs. Jennings.

REV. AND MRS. E. MORRIS EGELAND AND FAMILY MOVE TO KLEMME

Mr. Egeland Has Been Appointed Pastor Of Klemme-Liberty Methodist Churches

The Rev. and Mrs. E. Morris Egeland and children, Sylvia and Noel, arrived in Klemme on Thursday of last week to take up their residence in the Methodist parsonage. Mr. Egeland was appointed pastor of the Klemme and Liberty Methodist Churches at the session of the Northwest Iowa Annual Conference of the Methodist Church held recently at Cherokee.

The Egelands come to the community following a four and one-half year pastorate at the First Methodist Church at Calumet, Michigan. Previous pastorates have been at Stambough, Michigan; Evanston, Ill.; North Dakota and Superior, Wisconsin. At the time of this transfer to Iowa from Michigan, Mr. Egeland was serving his second year as president of the Marquette District Ministers' Association made up of all the Methodist ministers of the upper peninsula of Michigan. Mr. Egeland has been active in youth work, having served as dean of the Methodist Youth Camps at Little Hanging Horn Lake in northern Minnesota and at Michigamme Lake, Michigan.

The Rev. Egeland is a graduate of Northeastern University of Evanston, Illinois and of the Garrett Biblical Institute also of Evanston. He holds a Bachelor of Science Degree from Northwestern and a Bachelor of Divinity Degree from Garrett. While living at Calumet he served as part time instructor at the Michigan College of Mining and Technology teaching the beginning course in Zoology in the Forestry Department. The college is located at Houghton, Michigan, 13 miles from Calumet.

The Egeland children have been enrolled in the Klemme Public Schools. Sylvia in the junior class, of the High School and Noel in the seventh grade. A third child, Mary is a Freshman at the Northwestern University at Evanston. Mr. and Mrs. Egeland are both natives of Wisconsin and are of Norwegian-American parentage.

IOWA 4-H CLUB ENROLLMENT EXPECTED TO REACH 45,000

When Iowa makes its 1948-49 4-H enrollment goal of 45,000 members, it will have increased its membership 100 percent over the 1943 low mark.

In that year only 22,392 boys and girls were inlisted in the 4-H organization. Generally, it is considered that this was due to the war and the number of boys who were called into the service.

Except for this wartime slump, 4-H clubs have been steadily increasing their membership since 1934 when the figures totaled slightly more than 23,000 members. Before that time, the highest figure reached was 37,000 but it dropped off in the 1932-33 depression period.

Iowa 4-H clubs reached their all-time high in 1948 with an estimated enrollment of 40,000. This was a 6,000 increase above 1947.

Enrollment goals for this year anticipate an additional 5,000 members over the 1948 figure. Interpreted correctly, this means that not only must they gain 5,000 new 4-H'ers, but they must obtain enough others to make up for the normal loss that occurs as members reach the maximum age limit or move away.

THIS happens to be a world packed with trouble. There is a new trouble for each season — a rainy spring, a hot summer, a foggy fall, a wrecking winter.

Now with another autumn here, with football moving in, some interloper starts new trouble.

It happens this way: "Will you pick," he writes, "the most valuable lineman, the most valuable back, the greatest kicker, the greatest passer and the best pass-receiver you ever saw?"

The odd part of this complicated request is that it is quite a simple one — with one or two possible exceptions.

Grantland Rice

No. 1. The greatest lineman — The vote here goes to Cal Hubbard of Centenary, Geneva and several pro outfits. Fat Henry was a great tackle—one of the greatest. Germany Schultz, Bulldog Turner and Mel Hein were all great centers. Pudge Heffelfinger was a great guard. But Cal Hubbard was an entire line.

"Put old Cal out there to back up your line," Bo McMillin used to say, "and he'll stop a whole team. He is the most valuable player I ever saw."

Cal is around 6 feet 5 or 6 inches tall. He weighed around 260 and he was both fast and shifty. He could kill off a running game better than anyone I ever saw. Cal was like a fast-moving mountain moving in on you, tackling at both ends and the middle.

No. 2. The greatest all-around back—Two men fit in this picture. One is Jim Thorpe. The other is Bronko Nagurski. Thorpe could rip his way through a line. He could circle an end. He was a good passer and a good pass-receiver. He was a great defensive back when he felt in the mood. And he was the greatest all-around kicker of the lot —punting, place kicking and drop kicking.

Nagurski Was Powerful

Nagurski was a greater power back. He was also a great tackle and a star end. Bronko was the best all-around football player, including both backfield and line play, that football has known.

No. 3. The greatest kicker—He has already been mentioned. Thorpe and Strong were the two best I've ever seen. Ralph Kercheval of Kentucky was magnificent. Sammy Baugh has been a great kicker for over a dozen years.

No. 4. The greatest passer—It is at this point that one can wander off into the jungle. The choice gets down to two men—and if you know football at all, you know who they are. Gus Dorais, Benny Friedman, Arnold Herber and Ace Parker were all fine passers among many more. But there are only two in that plateau country above the field. They are Sammy Baugh and Sid Luckman.

I've talked with many a pro and run into many an argument that involves this pair. Baugh is a great kicker. Luckman is rated a better field general. But when it comes to passing you can make your own selection.

I talked recently with one of the best coaches in the National league. "For all-around team value," he said, "I would rather have Luckman than Baugh and Hutson combined.

"I know how valuable Baugh is. I also know how valuable Hutson was. But in running a team, combined with his deadly passing, Luckman is the most valuable football player I ever saw."

Few Coaches Would Agree

I might add that the coach referred to wasn't George Halas but an eastern entry. He would also find few coaches willing to agree that Luckman was more valuable than Baugh and Hutson combined. This combination could wreck two leagues.

Both Baugh of the Redskins and Luckman of the Bears are heading for the sunset country at the end of the road. They have taken heavy punishment for 11 or more years starting with T. C. U. and Columbia. In the way of exceptional skill and unsurpassable competitive spirit, they have done more for pro football than anyone I've ever known.

Harry Gilmer, Bobby Layne and Johnny Lujack have enormous shoes to fill when Sam and Sid decide to leave the field—which may be in 1949.

No. 5. The greatest pass-receiver —Hutson of Green Bay. There have been many good ones. But only one Hutson.

It might be noted in this connection, with pro football under discussion, that the All-America conference has turned in a good job in leveling the league by balancing team strength.

It was in 1892 that C. E. Duryea drove the first gasoline-powered automobile in the United States. Fifty years later the U. S. government terminated all civilian production of motor cars because of the war. In that 50 years more than 86 million vehicles had been produced.

J. P. studied the sheets a moment, and then looked up somewhat questioningly. "I notice something about a thirty day free—"

She smiled. "No, this is not exactly free. Yet, it is free in the sense that you'll not be paying for the new car at the present time. What you'll be paying the mere $250 for is absolutely prompt delivery of your new car within seven days after your deposit."

J. P. gave this a careful thought, then asked, "Supposing the car is not satisfactory, and the depositor decides he does not care for this type car?"

"That," she said quickly, "is a very good question. In fact, I'm glad you brought that up." She hesitated to ash her cigarette and, in doing so, seemed to be concentrating on the proper clauses to use, as she continued, "Now in the event you are not completely satisfied, the management will gladly refund your money and return the car to the factory. Isn't that fair enough, Mr Holloway?"

"I've heard so much about you and your rapid advance in the business world, that it's really quite a pleasure. . . ."

"Oh, yes, quite fair," he said, through the haze of cigar smoke, as he resumed reading of the typed sheets. They seemed all in order, he thought. Though the thought of a new car was somewhat new to him, yet, this seemed to be such a good investment, in fact—too good to pass up. Why, he'd be getting the jump on the boys at the club, who were thinking and talking about getting their new cars next month. Next month! Why he'd have his within seven days. . . .

THERE was a brief hesitation, and then he said, "Sounds all right. But—"

Miss Jenkins broke in, "I can readily understand, Mr. Holloway, a man of your intelligence will be suspicious of an investment of this nature. And well you might be. Yet, I can assure you—you'll be patting yourself on the back within the next ten days."

J. P.'s eyes wandered across to Mrs. Holloway for her approval. No comment.

"And remember this, Mr. Holloway," the saleswoman continued amiably, as she laid a slender hand upon J. P.'s desk, "you'll again be setting the pace. The first to recognize a good proposition. Never let it be said, 'J. P. Holloway overlooked a good bargain.'" Whereupon they laughed heartily.

After a moment's pause, J. P turned to Mrs. Holloway and said hesitantly, "You know Martha, we've had our old car some time . . ." he made a slight gesture with his free hand—"it's in good condition now that I've had it overhauled—yet, one cannot tell about those old models. Why, just the other day, John Fetters was telling about his old car's stalling in the noon-hour traffic on Fifth and Vine. We wouldn't want that to happen to us—would we—dear?"

Mrs. Holloway considered him solemnly. "But James," she began, "you said you were not interested in a new car—"

"Oh, I know, I know," he protested in alarm. "I wasn't—that is, until I heard this offer Miss Jenkins has made. And you should know that I never let a good proposition slip through my fingers. No, sir, not J P. Holloway." He then turned and smiled at the saleswoman, a warm, intimate smile Then continued, "To whom should I make this check out, Miss Jenkins?" he asked, as he fingered rapidly through his checkbook.

"James," Mrs. Holloway broke in, "perhaps we better not be too hasty. Supposing we talk this over this evening, and Miss Jenkins"—she nooded in the saleswoman's direction—"can drop in tomorrow and get your final decision." Turning quickly to Miss Jenkins, she added, "I'm sure that's perfectly all right with you!"

A shadow darkened the saleswoman's eyes. She glanced at J. P. and then back to Mrs. Holloway. "W-well, I—" and stopped.

Mrs. Holloway smiled gently. "I knew you'd understand," she said, and then quickly rose to open the door for the somewhat bewildered saleswoman.

J. P. chewed at his freshly lit cigar furiously. "But Martha," he burst out, "you—you don't seem to understand. I want to buy that car—now—not tomorrow or next week or next Christmas—"

"Have you made the check out, James?" she asked calmly.

"And just what has that got to do with you running this—this woman out of here. I certainly intend to make it out. And furthermore—"

"Yes," she countered, "you're going to make it out, James. But not to her! Instead, to your son."

J P choked for a moment. "I—I told you," he flared, "I was not going to send him one cent, and I meant just that!" He tapped nervously on the desk with his forefinger. "Any man with the intelligence he's supposed to have, letting some silly woman come along and make a complete fool of him . Well,"—he groaned—"it's sometimes difficult for me to believe he's my son."

Mrs. Holloway smiled. "But James, you've just proved beyond any doubt that he is your son."

J P. gave her a blank look. "Just what do you mean by that?"

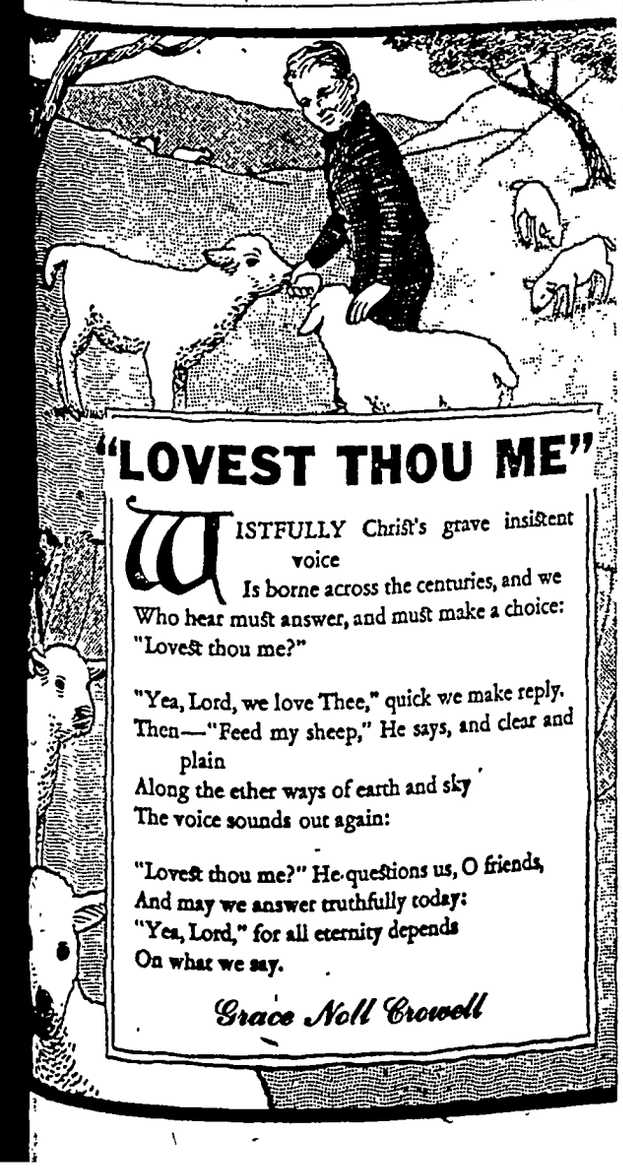
She paused. "It took me four days to inquire around and locate the right woman. It wasn't easy. In fact, I wasn't sure until yesterday."

J. P grunted, a deep frown puckering his forehead. "I certainly don't follow you. First, you stop me from buying a new car; now you're talking in riddles." He brushed the ashes from his vest unconsciously, then added, "Would you mind explaining just what this is all about?"

She nodded. "No, I wouldn't mind. In fact, I've looked forward to it."

"All right, all right. I'm waiting," he urged.

"Just this: Your son fell for a charming woman with a smooth sales talk; so did you. Those sheets of paper in her briefcase aren't worth the paper they're written on. She's a phoney; so was Jimmy's friend. When I was introduced to her, she apparently didn't recognize my name, but I knew hers. She's the woman who swindled your son."



"LOVEST THOU ME"

WISTFULLY Christ's grave insistent voice
Is borne across the centuries, and we
Who hear must answer, and must make a choice:
"Lovest thou me?"

"Yea, Lord, we love Thee," quick we make reply.
Then—"Feed my sheep," He says, and clear and plain
Along the ether ways of earth and sky
The voice sounds out again:

"Lovest thou me?" He questions us, O friends,
And may we answer truthfully today:
"Yea, Lord," for all eternity depends
On what we say.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

International Uniform Sunday School Lessons

By DR. KENNETH J. FOREMAN

SCRIPTURE 1 Kings 4 21—11-13. DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalms 33 12-22.

His Hand in History

Lesson for October 24, 1948

SUPPOSE you were given a long flexible wire and were asked to arrange it on a pattern which would represent history, what would you do to it? Some people would cut that wire into little bits and let them fall in a pile like jackstraws. History, they would say, is a meaningless collection of disconnected events—it has no real pattern.

Dr. Foreman

Someone else would arrange the wire like a long arrow pointing upward, others would make it into an arrow pointing downward; these would be the pure optimists and pessimists among historians.

Others would arrange it is a series of up-and-down curves—history, they would say, sometimes goes up and sometimes down, but it never gets anywhere. Others again would make an immense circle; history goes around and around in cycles, repeating itself.

Others still might take that wire and shape it into a kind of spiral, almost repeating itself but never quite, often seeming to go backward but actually making some progress.

God's Chosen People

A GOOD deal of the Old Testament is taken up with history Starting with Genesis and going through Esther, most of what you read is history But it is not mere chronicles, that is to say it is not a mere listing of events

The historical parts of the Bible were written by men who had a theory of history. They would agree that the Golden Age is ahead of us, not behind.

They would all agree that the most important figure in human history is not a human being at all, but God the Creator. They would all agree that his hand can be seen—if you look for it—in the events of man's existence here. And they all affirm that among all the nations of the earth there was one which could be called truly God's chosen people, the little nation called Israel, the people we know as the Jews.

The whole of Hebrew history is a sort of sermon on this text: Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people. The history of any nation, ancient or modern, would illustrate that text just as well; only the Israelite historians saw it most clearly. They showed how, when their people followed God's leading and his laws, they prospered; when they went their own stupid, selfish ways they suffered.

Somehow Good

ONE great lesson the Old Testament history teaches is that God's will is good, and that when man defies and disobeys that will, he does it to his own destruction, but that God can bring good out of evil.

People often act from bad motives, yet even the worst of motives God can overrule. David waded in blood to his throne, and he treated cruelly many of his enemies. That was not good; yet God brought out of that a national independence and strength.

David put Solomon on the throne because he was the son of his favorite wife; that was pure favoritism. Yet God brought good out of a choice which was selfish.

When the Israelites were tempted to fall for the cheap and nasty gods whose shrines filled the land, that was bad; but it gave the prophets their great opportunity to make perfectly clear the difference between false and true religion.

The Voice of God

HISTORY is no bucket of ashes. If you have ears to listen, it is the voice of God. These ancient tales of a nation long since dead, that lived in all scarce 500 years, carry God's voice to us today.

The diseases which are fatal to a nation's life are here described; the foundations on which alone true national welfare can be built are made quite plain.

Up to now, all nations have perished sooner or later. We can see some of them decaying in our own time. That is because no nation ever yet has built its life on God's design. But the pattern is there, the lesson has been written. God still waits for a people who will learn his lesson in how to live.

Ash trays should be emptied and washed each night before closing up the house. This prevents a stale, musty odor the following day.

Since frankfurters are cooked when manufactured they need only be heated; cover them with boiling water and simmer (do not boil) for about 5 to 10 minutes until they are thoroughly hot.

Origin of Mascara

Woman's oldest manufactured beauty aid, according to a Hollywood make-up man, is mascara.

This material is known to have been compounded by the Egyptians as far back as 4,000 B C. Inspection of feminine portraits of that time, as presented by wall paintings in modernly unearthed tombs, leads one to suspect that the glamor gals of ancient Egypt were highly comparable with those of today.

Many of them were inclined to apply their mascara more heavily than is artistically advisable.

HERE'S A RED STAR RECIPE YOU'LL LOVE

TEACHER LEARNS A LESSON ABOUT RED STAR DRY YEAST

HALLOWEEN DOUGHNUTS

2 packages Red Star Dry Yeast
½ cup warm water
½ cup milk, scalded
1 teaspoon salt
¼ cup sugar
2 eggs
4¼ cups sifted flour (approximately)
½ teaspoon mace
3 tablespoons shortening
Fat for frying

Dissolve 2 packages Red Star Dry Yeast in ½ cup warm water Let stand 2 in 3 minutes. Place scalded milk, salt and ½ cup sugar in a large bowl. Cool to lukewarm. Stir yeast solution thoroughly and add to this mixture. Add half the flour which has been sifted with the mace and beat well. Add eggs and melted and cooled shortening, stirring vigorously. Add remainder of flour stirring well. Place on lightly floured board and knead for 3 minutes. Shape into smooth ball and place in greased bowl. Brush top lightly with shortening. Cover and let rise in warm place for 45 minutes. Without punching down turn dough onto lightly floured board and roll to ½ inch thickness. Cut dough with 3 inch floured doughnut cutter Place doughnuts on floured baking sheet. Let rise in warm place until very light (about ¾ hour). Do not cover. Fry in deep hot fat (350° F.) on both sides. Drain; cool and roll in sugar. Makes 2 dozen.

1½ Billion Dollar Road Block!

RAILROADS MUST OPERATE around the clock every day and night of the year.

Although they know this, leaders of 16 railroad unions are demanding a five-day, Monday through Friday, week for one million railroad employes.

They want 48 hours pay for 40 hours work —in itself a 20% wage increase.

They also demand a minimum of 12 hours pay for any work performed on Saturdays, and 16 hours pay for any work performed on Sundays and holidays.

On top of all this they want an additional increase of 25c an hour for every employe!

You'd Pay the Bill!

Summing up these demands, they mean that these union leaders seek to force the railroads to give one million employes an annual raise which would average $1500 per employe!

The total cost of this would be no less than 1½ billion dollars per year, which is more than twice the expected net income of the railroads this year.

You'd pay the bill, because if these increased costs are forced on the railroads, they must have still further rate and fare increases.

Demands Unreasonable

These employes have had substantial raises during and since the war. Their average weekly earnings are higher than the average weekly earnings of workers in manufacturing industries. They have more job security than the average worker in American industry. They also enjoy paid vacations, a retirement system and other advantages more generous than the average worker receives.

In contrast with the demands of these 16 unions, which add up to the equivalent of 48c an hour, the Conductors and Trainmen recently settled their wage request for an increase of 10c an hour.

Railroads Run for Everybody—Not Employes Alone

The railroad industry must serve not one but many groups—producers, businessmen, shippers, passengers and the general public—night and day, every day of the year. These unions are proceeding in utter disregard of this important difference between railroads and other industries. Industrial plants can be shut down over weekends and holidays, but freight, mail, express and passengers must continue to move. Everybody who enters railroad employment knows this.

Strike Threat

On September 18, 1948, the leaders of these 16 unions began taking a strike vote. But the threat of a strike will not alter the opposition of the railroads to such unreasonable demands!

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

I'm Glad We're "Different!"

There's a lot of difference of opinion in our county on the best kind of pasture. Some say alfalfa mixed with brome grass others say mixed with oats or barley But all agree that a mixture's better than a single crop.

I sometimes think people are the same way — and the strength of America is its mixture of so many different strains — some from one country, some from another- right down to little differences: like folks who have a taste for beer and those who prefer cider.

From where I sit, so long as we never become intolerant of one another's different tastes so long as we live together with our differences, and even supplement them the way brome grass does alfalfa, then we're a mighty good crop!

So neighbor enjoy your cider while I enjoy my beer! Vote for your candidate -I'll stand by mine! But never let our differences divide us! -

Joe Marsh

HI-SCHOOL HI-LIGHTS

The first six weeks of school are over and we're all ready to start studying (?) on a new period. But even though the first six weeks are over they're of course not forgotten and some always receive special recognition for their grades. The teachers must not be exactly handing out grades, for only 1 in the entire high school received straight A's. This girl was, of course from the Senior class, namely Phyllis Boland. Next in line with 3 A's and 1 B, was a Freshman, Delores Thieman. The next category was the largest. Those with 2 A's and 2 B's were: Mary Ann Blumer, Sophomore; Gloria Haefner, Junior; Ruth Janssen, Junior; Donna Fjetland, Senior. Maybe next six weeks will show a great improvement.

The other day a notice appeared on the bulletin boards of the school and the teachers also read the same notice in all of the classes about the conduct on the buses. It seems that the conduct had better improve, or there will be more people walking home than riding on the buses.

The Freshmen seem to beat everyone to everything this year. They were the first ones to have a class party. Tuesday night they went to Forest City roller skating. No wonder they were more jumpy than usual Wednesday in school, because I imagine most of them were sliding around rather than skating around the rink. Could this be possible, Frosh?

SENIOR INTERVIEW

Robert Baack, our Charles Boyer the second, was born on August 17, 1929. He has black hair and brown eyes and is what we call tall, dark and handsome. His favorite past-time is sleeping, also. Looks like we have a sleepy class doesn't it? His hobby is hunting. Hunting what, "Bob"? His favorite sport is basketball. Those back seats on the bus going to the game wouldn't have anything to do with it either, I imagine.

GOSSIP!

B. R. and N. A., why are you always sitting on the bank steps? Do you want to borrow money to get married?

Beware boys ! ! M. L. is still asking boys for dates.

What sophomore with the initials S. B. likes a boy out of school with the initials T. P?

What Senior girl with the initials M. L. has a crush on a guy out of school with the initials of B. N.?

"Learn how to neck in ten easy lessons" A new course in K. H. S. with P. B. and N. S. as much educated instructors.

SPORTS

By "Bob"

The Klemme Shamrocks won their first and last baseball game of the year. They looked pretty good behind the good pitching of Merlin Brinkman. The score at the end of two innings was: Thornton 6 and Klemme 1, but the Shamrocks really got on the ball and behind their sharp hitting they came up and won 9 to 8 in the seventh inning and that was that. We will have practice drills outside now and then we will start basketball.

SEVENTH AND EIGHTH GRADE NEWS

The seventh and eighth grades are going to have a Halloween party for the 5th and 6th grades, Friday, October 22.

The junior high did a good job of picking up paper and trash from the school grounds.

John Bisom was our Dummy for the Week.

The boys and girls did a very good job compiling their life history into booklet. We are displaying the best ones in the school hallway.

Those receiving A in Spelling this week are:

Seventh Grade
Lois Jacobs
Daisy Schaefer
Janice Swanson

Eighth Grade
John Bisom
Margaret Boland
LuVerne Heginger

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Western Allies Place Berlin Issue Before U.N. as Negotiations Fail; Two Unions Barred From A-Plants

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

'BLACK FURY':
Peace Threat

There was no war in sight, yet the East-West situation was starkly dangerous.

It was dangerous for the United States, Great Britain, France and Russia—and for the United Nations which now had to thrust its hands into the tangled skein of diplomatic threads and try to straighten out the snarls.

PRACTICALLY no optimism existed among U. N. delegations in Paris. There was no reason for any.

The United States, Britain and France had broken off negotiations with Russia over blockaded Berlin and referred the issue to the U. N. security council as a threat to peace.

No hint of appeasement appeared in the western nations' attitude. They said they would reserve to themselves the full right to take whatever measures were necessary to maintain their position in Berlin while referring the case to the U. N.

BRITISH FOREIGN Secretary Ernest Bevin told the U. N. general assembly that Russia would be to blame if a "black fury," the incalculable disaster of atomic war," strikes the world

Immediate cause of this inflamed condition in Europe was the blatant bad faith exercised by the Soviets during the 58-day series of talks in Moscow between the three western ambassadors and Stalin and Molotov

After the three ambassadors, Smith of the U. S., Roberts of England and Chataigneau of France, had left the Soviet capital the western allies made public a 24,000-word "white paper" charging the Russians with welching on a secret agreement by Stalin to lift the Berlin blockade

WHEN THE western nations discovered the disillusioning fact that Russia was literally trying to pull a fast one in order to gain control of Berlin, further direct negotiation was patently useless. Thus, the issue was turned over to the security council.

Not that anyone hoped the security council would be able to take any effective action. The Russian veto probably would nullify any efforts it might make.

MOTIVES:
Russian

Washington believes the crisis centering in Berlin will continue at fever pitch at least until next spring —provided it does not explode into total war before then.

It is a bad outlook, of course, from the U. S. viewpoint. But for the Russians the coming six months loom as a golden opportunity to expand their power in Europe and throughout the world.

THEY WILL be able to do this, they believe, because American efforts and sentiment will be divided and weakened by the election campaign.

Official Soviet attitude is that American leaders will be so immersed in domestic affairs that they will be able to give only a fraction of their time to consideration of international developments.

That's why the Russians are trying to shoot the works now. It is why they saw fit to make the virtually impossible demand for control of all traffic—land, air and water—between Berlin and western Germany as one of the conditions for lifting the blockade which has throttled the German capital since June.

WHAT IS IT the Russians want so badly that they are willing to risk an atomic war to get?

Briefly, they want to get the U. S. out of Europe, and that means nothing else but that they want to control Europe themselves.

The Kremlin, some time ago, rejected a proposal that Russia and the western allies stabilize their military and political positions roughly along the lines that existed immediately after the war.

ACCORDING TO the Russian plan for domination of Europe, that arrangement would be no good because the Soviets fear the West would gain and they would lose too much.

With American help, western Europe could consolidate and strengthen its position and possibly prosper to the extent that Russia's situation in the East would be endangered. Moreover, the Soviet satellites, influenced by a free and thriving West, would be difficult to control.

IN THE RUSSIAN mind it follows, then, that America must be driven out, the European recovery program destroyed and the whole of Europe reduced to such a state of disorder and poverty that it would be unable to resist Russian demands.

Futility Unlimited

These are the three western ambassadors to Russia who engaged in six weeks of rigorous but unavailing diplomatic fencing with Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov on the subject of Germany and the Berlin blockade. They were able to accomplish nothing and finally left Moscow to report to the heads of their respective governments. Left to right are: Yves Chataigneau, France; Walter Bedell Smith, U. S., and Frank Roberts, Great Britain.

Bill Collector

Russia, the only nation that has not closed its lend-lease account with the U. S., has been asked to pay up pronto.

The state department, in a new note, called upon the Soviets to resume negotiations for settling its long overdue lend-lease account of 11 billion dollars.

News of the action was kept secret for two weeks for fear of upsetting the delicate Berlin discussions.

ANYTHING NEW

Cooler Crisis

HOTTEST QUESTION of the month in Washington for a while was not "Who will win the election?" It was not "Will we get into war?"

It was a question of who ordered 96 gleaming, new 1948 model refrigerators installed in the offices of every one of the United States senators.

Government workers were busily engaged in clamping the refrigerators to the office floors (at an estimated cost of well above $10,000) before anybody thought to ask who had conceived this ingenious scheme.

THE PROJECT called for moving refrigerators into the offices of senators who never before had had them and putting new ones into those senatorial sanctums that already were equipped with old ones.

It was a clear case of higher standards of living for solons.

Senate appropriations committee staff-members denied they had approved any appropriation for senatorial refrigerators, said furthermore that there was no record of any such appropriation.

RANKING NEXT to the riddle of who put the refrigerators there was the question of why a senator should need a refrigerator in the first place.

Somebody said maybe they were intended to replace the pigeonhole as convenient spots to keep legislation proposed by the President on ice.

NO ATOMS:
Two Unions

Mortally afraid of skulduggery at the atomic crossroads, the government has acted to bar unions whose officers refuse to take the non-Communist oath from its atom bomb plants.

SPECIFICALLY, the atomic energy commission issued an order telling two CIO unions to keep out of atomic installations — the CIO United Electric Workers and the CIO United Public Workers.

The action came on the heels of congressional charges that a network of Soviet spy rings tried during the war to dig up atomic secrets for Moscow.

Also, the atomic energy commission said, other unions from now on will be recognized officially as qualified to work in atom plants only if they can qualify for certification by the national labor relations board.

Said David E. Lilienthal, chairman of the commission, all atomic energy facilities must be operated "in a manner best calculated to assure that those who participate in the program are loyal to the United States.

ACTUALLY, UNION activity in all atomic plants, with the exception of the one at Oak Ridge, has been curtailed sharply since the atomic bomb project was launched. Nevertheless, a number of unions have tried to keep active in the hope that the curbs on union organizational work would be eased in the future.

A congressional committee had heard testimony from a self-described former Communist that the United Electrical Workers was "the largest Communist-dominated organization in the United States."

Rose Bushed

No one has yet counted up all the "Tokyo Roses," but it seems like there's one behind every bush. Latest of these is California-born Mrs. Iva Togury D'Aquino, whom the U. S. government charges with being one of Japan's most ardent wartime radio propagandists. She was brought here to stand trial for treason.

WHIZ:
Rocket Plane

It wasn't the sort of subject that Stuart Symington cared to be very specific about, but the air secretary did hint in an Air Force association speech that the U.S. X-1 rocket-powered research plane might have blasted through the air at a speed of from 860 to 1,000 miles an hour.

SYMINGTON MADE this startling semi-disclosure in an off-hand manner. Enumerating achievements by the air force during the past year, he made mention of "an airplane flying hundreds of miles faster than the speed of sound, which is 760 miles per hour at sea level."

AS ORIGINALLY designed, the X-1 was supposed to reach a speed of 1,107 miles an hour at 40,000 feet altitude and 1,700 miles an hour at 80,000 feet.

AS FAR AS is known, only two X-1 type planes now are in operation by the government—one by the air force and the other by the national advisory committee for aeronautics.

Five other X-1 models are on order, and a new and drastically different design, the X-4, is awaiting trial flight.

BIG LIFT:
To Berlin

Despite the smug Russian belief that Berlin could not be supplied from the air, the American air lift to the blockaded German capital has been spectacularly successful.

DURING THE first 90 days of the great aerial portage American transport planes flew more than 200,000 tons of food, fuel and medicine into Berlin since the Soviets clamped on their blockade in mid-June.

Air force headquarters at Wiesbaden said its planes had flown more than 15 million miles, through good weather and bad, along the narrow air corridors from the western zone of Germany to keep the heart of Berlin's isolated western sector beating.

IN THE FIRST 90 days 28,846 flights were made, with the air cargo including 125,608 tons of coal, 68,142 tons of food and 7,748 tons of other necessary items.

A typical 24-hour period in the air lift has about 400 flights carrying more than 3,000 tons of supplies into the besieged city.

EXPORTS:
Up or Down?

Predictions by the department of agriculture that U. S. grain exports during the current crop year may top last year's record by nearly four million tons was expected to give rise to a cabinet tiff over how much grain should be shipped overseas.

There are two schools of thought. Charles F. Brannon, secretary of agriculture, favors increasing exports to prevent possible surpluses in the U. S. that might lead to an expensive price support program.

SECRETARY OF Commerce Charles W. Sawyer, on the other hand, insists that grain shipments should be cut to a minimum in order to keep food prices down in this country. He argues, also, that Europe would be better off to use its dollars for industrial machinery rather than food.

According to the agriculture department, the world's big exporting countries probably will have about 10 per cent more grain to spare this year than in 1947-48 when exports topped 34.6 million tons.

THE DEPARTMENT added that the U. S. "is again likely to provide nearly half of the total world trade."

Last year the United States exported slightly more than 15 million tons—nearly 44 per cent of all the grain exported.

PEARY:

A United States expedition to the Arctic last summer found documents left there in 1905 by Rear Adm. Robert E. Peary, discoverer of the North Pole, a recent state department announcement has disclosed.

The brief report contained no explanatory details. It said: "As is usual on northern expeditions, Peary's notes found in the cairn were replaced by appropriate documents."

Washington Digest

Will Stratovision Arrive? They're Working on It Now

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—"Is television here to stay?"

That has been the favorite crack in AM (regular broadcasting) circles for some time. Now it's been displaced by another:

"Will stratovision arrive?"

If it doesn't, say the enthusiastic stratospheric promoters, millions of people in rural areas will be unable to receive television programs for years, if ever.

What is "it"?

"The stratovision system simply puts the antennae and television transmitter in an airplane flying in lazy circles above the earth," they explain, "and the shortwave sent out from this airborne antennae blankets the earth's surface like a great inverted ice cream cone and covers an area approximately 500 miles across."

BAUKHAGE

Since television waves travel in a straight line and not in high, leaping loops like long-wave radio, their range is limited, just as human sight is limited. You can't see nearly as far on a level city street as you can from the top of a mountain. That parallel isn't an exact one, but it's a good rough comparison.

So television waves have to travel on a special cable underneath the ground (co-axial cable), or else leap from one high tower to another (microwave relay). And the farthest they can travel is some 35 to 50 miles. But stratovision waves come from a transmitter as high as the plane carrying the transmitter can fly, 30,000 feet, we'll say.

What about storms? Well the stratospherites say they miss most of them at that height, and anyhow, they can use more than one equipped plane, so they can shift the point of transmission of a program from one to the other and thus dodge the storm. They insist that they have already demonstrated that this is possible, that they can deliver.

I haven't seen any of the recent tests so I don't know. Naturally the oldtimers (although the oldest oldtimers in television are still pretty new) are skeptical. After a test held recently in Zanesville, Ohio, for the benefit of newspaper and radio folk, many were still skeptical. It was admitted that conditions on the test day were not ideal by any means and it was claimed that there was interference from other stations which would be eliminated.

Variety magazine's correspondent, a keen observer of radio, said:

"Demonstration proved that the higher the altitude, the clearer and more extensive the pick-up. For all practical purposes, though, the specific, physical certainty of the underground co-axial or the thru-the-air, microwave relay would seem to have the networking edge for the time being."

("Be not the first by whom the new is tried. . . .")

The backers of the new system, Westinghouse Radio Stations, Incorporated, think differently. Their request for a commercial license was turned down by the FCC last month but they expect requirements to be altered.

Glenn Martin, whose aircraft company thought enough of the idea to work out the developments of the aviation end said:

"Flying the transmitter is one of the greatest single advances in the history of television."

I talked with one of the very earnest young men who are attempting to convert the skeptics. He seemed to have no doubts that the method equalled any other. In fact he thought that competitors would fight it because it was so good.

The whole thing is a young man's idea. He is C. E. (Chili) Nobles, 30-year-old radar expert whose work in that field was a valuable wartime contribution. He is a Texan (hence the nickname, I suppose) and the story is that the idea first struck him when he was flying a plane high above his home.

As he ran over the various figures which were in the back of his mind, the number of miles his home was from the nearest big city, the altitude and the various other calculations formulae, logarithms and assorted humorous material which an electronic engineer toys with instead of reciting limericks to himself to pass away the time, he suddenly thought:

"If I only had a television transmitter with me, and my folks had a set, and if I had some other planes for relays, they could get the same television programs New York does."

"I suppose long hours of intense work on military radar had so crowded my mind with details of its operation that I looked for radar possibilities in everything I saw," the young stratovision creator said afterward. "Radio already had proven its adaptability and value for airplane communications and in navigational aids, including blind flying. Turning these facts over mentally, I concluded that Westinghouse already had at hand basic engineering information which seemed to justify the ambitious plan."

He sold the idea to Westinghouse and Glenn Martin and they went ahead and backed his extensive, not to say expensive, experimentation.

I caught some of the enthusiasm which I know "Chili" must radiate from the young man who sat across the table from me explaining the drawings.

"Think of what stratovision would mean to the readers of your column," he said.

"We only asked for a license for one station but with more we could link up the Pacific and Atlantic coasts so that we could pick up Hollywood and New York studios (I don't know why he left out Chicago) with only eight planes flying 400 miles apart. By adding six planes to the system to cover the Northwest and Southeast we could serve 78 per cent of the population!"

And once we got the rural televisers looking, I thought, what a lot of new material would be put into the telecasts to say nothing of the greatly broadened market for television sets and advertising which would be created.

The first stratovision experiments established the surprising fact that there were lots of television sets in areas which could not possibly be reached ordinarily (by co-axial cable or microwave). At the first call for response to the test programs many letters came from such areas. Probably amateurs who had built their own sets, and perhaps erected their own antennae on some high elevation.

It would seem that the country is willing to try the Nobles experiment if it gets the chance.

INTOXICATED AUTO DRIVERS

Another annual conference of the American Association of Motor Vehicle Commissioners has just been held and we never read its speeches and conclusions without feeling that old time vaudeville is back. This time the usual alarm over the souse at the auto wheel is voiced and the belief expressed that "chemical tests be made to determine the degree of drunkenness of any motorist arrested for, or suspected of, being intoxicated."

—*—

What difference does it make? Is it okay if the driver of a high powered car is only slightly pickled? Is it an extenuating circumstance if he is only half drunk? Is there a fine line between roaring down a crowded street two-thirds intoxicated and 100 per cent cracked?

—*—

We cling to the childish notion that the wheel of a sedan, bus, beach wagon or truck is no place for an operator who is even partly stiff. And, while we are aware that the courts are hard to convince, we hold the cause of safer traffic will never be aided by the discharge of wild drivers on a ruling that the chemical test revealed the maniac wasn't as drunk as he seemed.

—*—

The motor vehicle commissioners noted "difficulty proving reckless driving due to drunkenness and other factors" in the courts. Difficulty is an understatement, brother. But the politicians, the fixers and the smoothies in the profession of law will give their customary all-star performance, even against a chemical report.

—*—

And you will be surprised how many judges will rule that the lad who drove through the school zone in an alcoholic haze should be freed with a $5 fine and put back into heavy traffic with his breath still showing.

—*—

Motor vehicle commissioners, you amaze us. You know very well that there is no serious enforcement of motor vehicle laws anywhere, that the highways are jammed with drivers with one or more arrests for drunkenness, that politicians leap to the rescue of the fricasseed operator with the speed of light and that too many motor vehicle commissioners, being political footballs themselves, express resentment only at annual conventions.

—*—

The convention delegates also came out for more stringent operating license tests. This action was also in the orthodox pattern. This routine has been followed ever since the "999" first frightened horses in the streets of Detroit. Pay no attention. The prevailing tests wouldn't prove a man fit to operate a scooter in a back alley. Anybody is allowed to drive an auto who can wiggle his ears, give his full name correctly and promise not to drive while blindfolded.

—*—

There was never a time in history when there were so many auto drivers loose who have never been told it was wrong to pass cars on the right side, turn corners inside the center of intersections, take sharp turns at 50 miles per hour, beat the traffic light and regard the white line as wholly fictional. Back to your corners, commissioners! And how about a chemical test to determine sincerity in the war against murder on the broad highways everywhere? (You, too, judge!)

New Car Complaints

The Auto Club of New York says it is deluged with complaints about new model automobiles. Buyers charge that they are hard to handle and park, that the business of building fenders and lamps all into one sheet of metal make repairs exhorbitant, that the bumpers are useless and that many so-called innovations are a pain in the neck.

—*—

Well, it seems to this department, too, that the car builders have a lot to answer for. We have seen some models on which the "bumpers" could be used only in jest. They are so close to the body that, by the time the bumper is hit, the rest of the car has been wrecked.

Imagination Is Key to Simple But Effective Table Settings

By Ertta Haley

"OH, HOW I wish I were artistic and could do interesting things with my table settings," is a frequent cry heard when women gather. It happens especially when someone has put forth some thought in her table setting.

Well, you can all relax, that is, all of you who don't think you have artistic ability. If you know anything about color, and add to that your common sense, you can do something out of the ordinary.

Have you a red and white checked cloth? This is very seasonal currently and can be used for a baked bean and cider supper. Use some charming pottery plates for the dinner, brown mugs and a centerpiece of glowing red Indian corn arranged with dark green leaves in a polished wood salad bowl. Is there anything simpler?

What about using a gourd or a hollowed out squash for the centerpiece, with bittersweet or leaves or any array of fall fruit spilling out of it? This is very effective when the tablecloth is a mustard shade of yellow, a dark chartreuse green or a glowing tangerine color.

You don't have a cloth in any of those colors? Fix one out of a worn sheet, some flour or sugar sacks, dyed to one of the shades just mentioned. If the sheet needs stiffening, run it through a light starch after the last rinse so it will be crisp and new-looking.

It takes but a little imagination, as you can readily see, to make effective table settings.

Informal Settings Are Easily Made

For breakfast, lunch and family dinner or supper you can use all manner of simple fabrics to create the background of a meal. In fact the materials for many of these may be in the scrap bag right at this moment.

Select table trimmings . . .

Old pillow cases and sheets are excellent if they have enough material in them worth saving. Cut these into the proper sizes either for cloth or mats, with napkins to match if you like. Finish off the edges simply by hemming, then dye them in shades you will want.

Old tablecloths which are worn and frayed can be cut down for mats, the size for which is 11 by 17 inches. Luncheon napkins are 17 inche square, dinner napkins are 19 inches square, and tea or bridge napkin is usually 11½ inches square.

Good colors to use are red pepper, chili green, made by using a jade green shade in the dye, or a patio fuschia, made by using four parts wine with one-half pint of purple.

A siesta violet is made from three parts purple with two parts orchid dye. Dusty pink is made from three parts peach dye with two parts pink dye. Bittersweet uses three parts orange with one-half part scarlet. Instant dyes are used in all of the above suggestions.

Another easy finish is fringing. You can easily do this in the evening for a set of mats and napkins.

If You Want Linen, Use Toweling

An easy way to make mats and napkins for table use is with Irish linen toweling. This trick frequently is used by women when they want the crisp, nicely washable finish of linen economically

Both mats and napkins can be made from the toweling, and you'll find that being able to buy the material by the yard has the added advantage of giving longer lengths when you want to make runners.

Plaid and crossbarred linen toweling are good choices for casual and informal tablecloths or mat and napkin sets. If you are making these mainly to brighten up the kitchen or dining surroundings, you might even consider buying enough toweling to add simple drapes for the windows.

Stripes in linen toweling are also good choices to use for curtain and place mat ensembles. Their gay colors make them a pleasant background for any of the popular styles of casual dinnerware.

For the more formal luncheons and dinners, you might like to choose a grill-like scroll print done in white on both pastel and bright colored backgrounds.

Scroll prints will be nice with better dishes. The lovely powder blue shade, for example, would be very effective with dinnerware which has touches of yellow in it. Use yellow chrysanthemums as the flower.

Other Fabrics Give Many Possibilities

Coarse textured rayons, dyed if they are not a suitable shade, will make excellent tablecloth and mat sets. If you dye them in one of the gala Mexican shades, they can be used with fiesta ware, with a centerpiece arrangement of grapes. Many scorched or worn tablecloths can be used as source material.

If damask has lost its crisp finish and high luster, it can make handsome settings for more formal dining. Dye it a deep rich green, peach, pastel pink or soft yellow Color heigthens the pattern of the damask. A centerpiece of polished fruits and glossy leaves in a square white pottery dish will be effective.

For informal entertaining there's nothing lovelier than braided mats which can be made from pieces out of the scrap bag. Dye these to work out attractive colors.

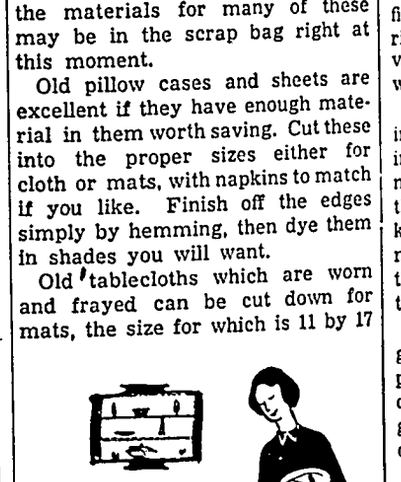
The monotone or solid colored mat is best for plain dishes, but occasionally it's possible to work out attractive mats with white and a color. These mats should be made slightly larger than 11 by 17, the size for regular placements. Use mugs with mats to make a thoroughly attractive setting, and a matching pottery bowl filled with gourds as the centerpiece.

Plain white mats made out of almost any material can be brightened by use of wide, colorful borders or various edgings, such as lace, braid, rick-rack or decorative borders. Buy borders already made or use cast-off pieces of materials, either in their original shades or dyed, whichever offers the most effective treatment.

Seasonal Setting

For a party after a football game, serve a hearty supper in the warm glow of an open fire. Set out a lengthened table in the spirit of the occasion with a forthright Irish linen tablecloth in bright red and white checks, with pottery dishes and mugs for cider or hot coffee. The color scheme is further carried out in a centerpiece of red Indian corn, polished green leaves and a wooden salad bowl. Fall fruit can be used in place of the corn.

Be Smart!



Beltlines are the lifelines of fashion. Plan yours to add a smart note to costumes, particularly gold or silver or some of the ultra smart dark ones in all colors. Plan them, too, as accessories for your new outfits as belts are headed for as important a place in the limelight as ever. The popularity of period designs continues, the scrolls and antique figures as important as ever. Very new is the flashing display of more than one buckle, often arranged in a series around the entire waistline.

Notes of a New Yorker:

Ilse Koch, the convicted Nazi monster who bragged that she used the skin of concentration camp victims to make lampshades, has had her life term cut to four years.

Oh, well. Praps they were very small lampshades.

This terrible woman made one of the trial judges very ill when she testified. She admitted selecting tattooed men (for death in the gas chambers) "because their skin made interesting lampshades."

If she deserves only four years for butchery—the least our gov't can do is open every cell at Atlanta, Leavenworth and Alcatraz, where some GIs are doing 20 years for merely striking an officer.

Hollywood's pet quip deals with Mrs. Danny Kaye (Sylvia Fine) whose bigtime lyrics made and kept Danny a star. At Warner's, it appears, they are miffed with her, alleging she acts as though she were Queen Liz. When she phones, they report, she announces imperially: "This is Sylvia Fine."

She phoned a film-cutter and intoned: "This is Sylvia Fine."

There was no answer for about 20 seconds—then she said: "What's the matter—are you there? This is Sylvia Fine."

"Just a moment, Miss Fine," was the wonderful retort. "I haven't finished bowing yet."

Jules Levine relays the one about the woman who tried to return a pair of shoes to a swank Beverly Hills store patronized by movie stars and the elite.

"These won't do," she said, "I simply can't walk in them."

"Moddom," was the disdainful reply, "People who have to walk do not shop here."

John Edgar Hoover's bronchial pneumonia was aggravated by worry and heartache caused by politicians attempting to have him fired . . . Democrats and Republicans are joined in the scheme . . Herbert Hoover prevented his dismissal a few weeks ago.

We can certify to the G-Man's loyalty. . . . He has had many chances to retire and accept jobs that pay ten times his wage. . . . One offer (to narrate a radio crime program) was for $100,000.

As someone said: "Gratitude has the shortest memory."

News Item: "The trial for Hitler and Eva Braun has again been postponed."

It seems as though we never will find out whether Adolph was a Nazi or not.

Sounds in the Night: At Lindy's: "As Maine goes, so what?" . . . At the Bagatelle "I love you more than yesterday and less than tomorrow." . . . At Monte's-on-the-Park: "Don't expect him to pick up the check—his arm's worn out from lifting all those drinks." . . . At the Savannah "Now that Dewey's won all the polls, all he has to do is win the election." . . . At Gilmore's: "I don't have to get drunk to see snakes. Not with the friends I've got."

Item: "Ground was broken yesterday for the permanent site of the U. N. in New York."

To make it realistic they should've broken a promise.

A senate colleague of Mr. Truman's told a reporter Harry "never had any troubles until he stepped into FDR's shoes."

"You mean," edited the scribe, "until he stepped out of them."

Quotation Markmanship: Helen Fraser: She suffers from a himferiority complex. . . . Bill Stern: Why is it called free speech when you consider the price Americans had to pay for it? . . . Anon: Maybe the reason China stays at war is that she sees what peace has done to the rest of the world. . . . E. Gardner: My wife has a terrible memory—she remembers everything. . . . J. W. Raper: A man picks a wife the same way a farmer picks an apple. . . . David Crown: The best way to hold a wife is often.

The other Sunday night this reporter asked Cong. McDowell (who is busy probing Reds) about the failure to deport Ferenc Vajta, a Hitler ally, accused of helping massacre millions of people in Europe . . . Up to the time of colyuming to press there has been no reply from Mr. McDowell.

Vajta, now jailed at Ellis Island, probably will be released when "the Winchells cool off" . . . There has been great pressure in the state department to hush up the entire stench . . . The examiner (who heard the Vajta testimony) handed down a decision recommending that the warrant against Vajta be dismissed . . . But that decision is, for the time being, "hidden" in a Washington desk—because it is too hot to release right now.

POOR HEATING SYSTEMS ARE FARM FIRE HAZARD

Faulty heating systems are second only to lighting in causing fires in Iowa farm dwellings, says Norval Wardle, farm safety specialist at Iowa State College.

Clogged chimneys can be a fire hazard as well as waste of fuel. When burning any kind of fuel, the accumulations of fractions of coal tar caused by incomplete combustion will clog up chimneys.

The danger involved in having a clogged chimney begins when the coal tar fractions becomes hot and burn, Wardle points out. The burning of incomplete fractions gives off numerous large sparks. On a windy day, these sparks may travel as far as a half mile and cause a fire. Also, when this waste material catches fire, it produces a tremendous amount of heat which may burn out mortar and weaken the chimney.

Commercial compounds are available for burning out chimneys. This burning out process should be followed at least twice a year or according to the need.

Another safety measure to follow is to inspect the shingles on the roof. If the shingles are dry and curling, it is advisable to attach a spark arrestor to the top of the chimney or cover the roof with fireproof shingles.

New Homes In Klemme

Since this spring Klemme now has ten more houses either completed or near completion Four of these are new homes built by Mrs. Knoke, Herman Back, Mrs. Ridder and Henry Buseman. There are three new basement houses built by Byrnes Lemke, Verner Lewis and Phillip Bock Three more houses have been moved to town by George Buseman, Mrs. Otto Pringnitz and Melvin Neuberger.

There will be more houses built in Klemme this coming summer, and Klemme is growing every year.

American Legion and Auxiliary Meeting On Monday November 1st

The American Legion meeting of Adam-Schaefer Post 625 will be held on Monday evening, November 1st instead of the regular first Tuesday. This change was made because of the election on Tuesday this year. The Auxiliary will have their meeting on the same date.

"LIFE IN THESE STATES"

At Denison last week, a charming "little old lady" crossed the street, stopped in the middle to visit with a big black stray dog. Traffic rolled to a halt; drivers sat and smiled. Nobody honked, nobody hurried. Presently the little old lady and the dog finished their "visit"; cars shifted into gear and soon the street was busy again.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE HANCOCK COUNTY FARM BUREAU

The annual meeting of the Hancock County Farm Bureau was held Thursday evening in the Garner High School Auditorium. Kenneth Thatcher, secretary of the I. F. B. F. was the guest speaker. Mr. Thatcher emphasized the importance of everyone joining hands, working together for the good of agriculture, and the values of Farm Bureau to its members when this goal of combined effort is obtained. Mr Thatcher's talk was well received by those in attendance.

Preceding th order of business and entertainment, Rev. J. Dallas Gibson gave the invocation.

In order to adequately finance the county organization it was unanimously voted to increase the dues for 1949 from $10.00 to $15.00. Officers for the coming year are Jack Dethmers, president; Erwin Kahl, Vice-president; Lowell Maley, secretary; Richard Brown, treasurer; Clarence Bird, voting delegate; Victor Loeberg, alternate voting delegate; Mrs. Clarence Greiman, County Women's Chairman; Mrs. Leo Jass, County Women's Vice-chairman; and Mrs. Marie Wille, Girls' 4-H Club Committee Chairman.

Entertainment numbers were furnished by Miss Abigail Hueneman, who sang "Somewhere a Voice is Calling" and "Some Day My Prince Will Come." She was accompanied by Miss Miriam Hueneman. Eugene Smith, pianist of Kanawha, presented "Intermezzo" by Russe. Bill Templeton and Bernie Engstler of Garner, accompanied by Dorothy Templeton, furnished the comedy for the evening with their interpetation of two western ballads.

Floyd Huling, Regional Organization Director, was introduced by Jack Dethmers. Mr Huling extended an invitation to all to attend the annual I. F B. F meeting which will be held in Des Moines, November 15th to 18th, and to the A. F. B F. convention to Atlantic City on Dec. 13th to 17th.

Commuity singing was led by Paul G Shurts, fieldman, with assistance from Mrs. Chet Stille at the piano.

SPORTMAN ASKED TO AID BIOLOGISTS

Sportsmen throughout Iowa are asked to aid state biologists in determining the ratio of young to old game birds again this season. The Conservation Commission asks that the right wing of quail and the right leg of pheasants, from the knee joint down, taken during the open season be mailed to the Conservation Commission office in Des Moines or given to local conservation officers. By study of the shape, size, and hardness of the spur on pheasant legs, and by the study of the shape of the primary feathers on quail wings, it is possible for biologists to tell whether production for the year was normal

Specimens saved for these studies should be identified as to county in which they were taken.

Biologists are anxious that a minimum of 10,000 feet and as many wings be collected so that maximum accuracy in ratio determination may be secured.

HALLOWE'EN PARTY FOR ALL HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS OCT. 30

The Reformed Church is having a Halloween Party of all the High School students this coming Saturday night, October 30, at 7:30 p. m. Everyone invited, everyone will have fun, lots of games in store, and lots of surprises. Please don't wear any costumes; we have the treats and lunch all planned. This party is for the high school students of both churhes.

KLEMME FARMER ESCAPED SERIOUS INJURY

Hopes His Experience Will Help Others

Howard Huff, farmer near Klemme, escaped serious injury last Friday and was treated for very bad bruises on his left leg. He was riding his tractor and stopped to get off. He stepped onto the power take-off which was running and fell.

The power take-off whirled him around. By grabbing onto something, Huff managed to pull himself free All of this happened in a few secondss and nearly all of his clothes were torn from him. Howard says that he has learned his lesson Farmers be sure and turn off the power before leaving the tractor.

THIS IS NOT TIME TO CONVERT TO FUEL OIL

Regardless of the apparent loosening of the fuel oil supply, this is no time to convert to that type of heating, warns Dale Hull, extension agricultural engineer at Iowa State College.

The tremendous effort made by oil producers to build up the supplies has produced only sufficient fuel to heat homes already equipped to heat with fuel oil this winter. Hull urges operators of home heating equipment to take every possible precaution to make the most of their fuels.

In addition to the short supply, the price of oil is another reason for using it efficiently. Increased production of fuel oil has been accompanied by an increase in price, placing an additional burden on the pocketbook of the farmer heating his home with oil.

Storm windows and doors will produce a marked reduction in the fuel oil consumption over a year's time Reducing the temperature of the room 10 degrees at night will reduce oil consumption from 4 to 8 percent.

Insulation is another method of keeping the heat in the house With the increased cost of fuel, money spent to reduce heat losses is repaid quickly Also check for leaks around window sashes, door frames and floor plates.

Hull suggests that oil heating units be checked to see if they are working properly. The heaters must be level or too much oil will be burned, indicated by a smoky flame.

Draft regulators are important to efficient operation. A regulator automatically controls the chimney draft to provide just the right amount of air to give good combustion. If the stove burns with a lazy, smoky flame the draft should be increased by moving the adjusting weight on the damper forward. Cut down the draft if the unit burns with a roaring, white flame.

New Improvements

Kluckhohn installed two new windows at the front of their store the past week One of the windows had been broken a week ago, the other one had several bad craks. This is a nice improvement for their store.

The Corner Store installed several new fountain stools for customer's use at the fountain They are not only nice looking but comfortable too. Mr. and Mrs. Terhufen have made some nice improvements in their store.

BOY SCOUTS OVERNIGHT CAMP ON OCT. 30-31

The Boy Scouts of Klemme will attend an overnight camping trip at Camp Roosevelt at Clear Lake this week-end, Saturday and Sunday, October 30-31st. They will work on different merit awards and have a Halloween Program over the 2 days. A lot of fun is in store for the boys from the different towns that will attend this camp.

GENERAL DUTY SECTION OF THE IOWA STATE NURSES' ASS'N. MEET

Voted To Endorse A 40-hour Week On A 5-day Basis

To meet competition in other fields and thus attract inactive married nurses back into the profession and to assist in the recruitment of student nurses, the General Duty Section of the Iowa State Nurses' Association voted Friday to endorse a 40-hour week on a 5-day basis. This action took place during the four-day ISNA convention being held in Ft. Dodge October 13, 14, 15, and 16.

Mary Mesecher, Davenport, ISNA General Duty Section Chairman, pointed out that the shorter work week "may be efficiently staggered in order to insure constant and better patient service. Where the five-day week has been in effect, it has found that sick leave has been definitely cut down because nurses are less fatigued when they have one day for work in their own home and one day for rest."

Other recommendations formulated to keep more nurses on active duty were provisions for maternity and educational leave. Standards previously set called for minimum of $175 a month for general duty nurses with $5 raise every six months to two years. Emphasis was made on salary raises after two-year period being based on merit consisting of loyalty, tenture of service, education, interest and efficiency.

The private duty section of the association raised the private duty fee to $10 for 8 hours duty, to become effective November 1, 1948. The increased fee now meets those of Kansas, Minn, Nebraska, Illinois and Missouri and will, according to Mrs. Anna Murray, Waterloo, chairman of private duty section, "do much to cut down our losses of private duty nurses to other states."

New officers elected at the convention were First Vice-Preident, Lillian Frommelt, Fort Dodge; Secretary, Sister Mary LaSalette, Sioux City; and Second Vice-President, Mildred Farr of Des Moines.

SEASON OPENS

DUCK SEASON OPENS OCT. 29TH

Duck hunters in favored locations may expect good shooting when the duck season opens at noon, October 29th, according to pre-season reports received by the Conservation Commission officials. In the natural lake area wherever sloughs have not dried out, duck huntres may expect to find flocks of mixed ducks, with important numbers of geese also in the area. Reports from Mississippi River and Missouri River shooting grounds indicate fair duck supplies, with an unusually large proportion of big ducks, mallards, pintails, and red-heads, in evidence.

Hunters are reminded that shooting on opening day is not allowed until noon. Each day after the opening, legal shooting begins at one-half hour before sunrise and closes one hour before sunset. The daily bag limit is four ducks per day with eight in possession after the first day. Only one wood duck may be in possession at any time.

The bag and possession limit on geese is four. Not more than two may be Canada, Hutchins, cackling, or white-fronted geese. Two of any of these geese may be included in the limit. The entire goose bag may be made up of either blue or snow geese or any combination of them.

Reception Friday Night

The reception for the Rev. Egeland and family will be this Friday evening at the Klemme Methodist Church. All members and friends of the Methodist Church are cordially invited to be present Friday night, Oct. 29th.

KLEMME CIVIC CLUB PLANS BIG CHRISTMAS PROGRAM

ASK THE FARMER FIRST

With the 1948 pheasant season opening at noon, November 11, and the quail season opening November 1, many hunters have not yet decided where they will hunt. The problem of where the unacquainted hunter can hunt is complicated by "no hunting" signs. Most of these "keep out" signs are the direct result of lack of sportmanship and fair play on the part of hunters at one time or another.

It is the responsibility of the individual sportsman to make himself welcome in the quail and pheasant territories. It is a mistake and a violation of the Iowa statutes to trespass with dog or gun on any closed or cultivated lands other than the state-owned public shooting grounds without first asking permission of the owner.

Hunters are urged to go to their prospective hunting territory in plenty of time nd contact the land-owner on whose property they desire to shoot and make necessary arrangements.

The importance of farmer-sportsman relationship cannot be stressed too greatly. One careless or malicious act on the part of the single hunter may close a given area for a long period of time to all hunters. If every hunter conducts himself as a true sportsman the farmer-sportsman problem will disappear into thin air.

ODD JOBS FOR A RAINY DAY

With the corn-picking rush on in Hancock County, saving up jobs for a rainy day is like putting money in the bank. That is true, if the jobs are planned and done efficiently when a bad day does arrive

"Do the most pressing and important jobs first," says the County Extension Director Paul Henderson, reminding farmers that it's usually the livestock and their care that's most apt to be overlooked in the dawn-to-dusk corn harvest rush.

Rainy fall days are a good opportunity to get the livestock watering system ready for the first cold snap. Too often the first hard freeze leaves farmers busy thawing out hog waterers and water pipes when they could be out picking corn.

Getting barns and sheds ready for winter is another item that should rate high on the list of things to do. Henderson suggests checkcing outside walls and siding, and door latches and the hinges. Barn and shed windows taken out for the summer can be replaced. Approaches to barn doors can be repaired. Litter carriers may need some adjustment for heavy winter use.

Hay feeders and outside feed bunks can be fixed up and put in place for winter feeding. Gates and lot fences need to be in good condition during cold weather. The best time to make repairs is before the ground freezes.

Besides catching up on livestock care during a rainy spell, there's a good many other farm jobs that may need to be done before the corn-picking season ends. Storm windows can be put up, wire needs to be placed around young trees to keep rabbits from eating the bark, and farm machinery still standing out should be stored for the winter.

Henderson recommends checking automobile and tractor tire chains to make sure they're ready for winter use. Driveways and garage and machine-shed approaches may need repair for all weather use.

While we all hope for good weather during the corn-picking season, a rainy day can be put to mighty efficient use when work is planned and carried out with an eye on the cold weather just ahead.

KLEMME CIVIC CLUB MEETING REPORT

The Klemme Civic Club meeting last Friday evening at the Community Hall was well attended by members of almost every business house.

A report was given on the summer soft-ball departments and the season's expenses. The equipment bought were lights, polls, wiring, suits, bats, balls, bases, netting and care for the grounds; the ball club has a balance of $200. They again thank all for the donations and making it possible to start the night games and ending the season with some in the bank for next year.

Next, a project was brought up for discussin, Do Klemme citizens want their garbage and trash picked up every week? In other towns similar collections are done weekly, and it may be possible here if desired. All citizens can voice or write their desire to Mike Lemke, Vice-President of the Civic Club.

A bigger and better Christmas decoration for Klemme has been decided at the meeting. There will be an improvement on the street decorations with more lights and more trees along the walks. There will also be a decorated and lighted tree in the town park, and a tree in the Community Hall. There will be a big program with Santa Claus, free packages of candy, and a free movie for all.

There will be a contest for the best decoration of a residential home, and they hope a lot of Klemme folks will decorate their homes this Christmas. The business folks are also asked to decorate outside for Christmas this year too.

The Christmas committee consists of Clarence Waterman, Lee Jennings, Harry Schuster and Bert Jones on decorations; Wallace Pavey and Martin Barz are on the program and movie committee.

HUNTING AND TRAPPING LAWS NOW AVAILABLE

Synopsis of the 1948-49 hunting and trapping laws are now available from local conservation officers, county recorders, and other license sales agencies, as well as from the State Conservation Commission offices at Des Moines. The new leaflets contain pertinent information on open seasons and laws governing the taking of game, game birds, and fur-bearing animals.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Security Council Gets Berlin Issue, Inconclusive Meeting Stalls Action; Russia Proposes Big Four Parley

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

DEBATE:
Inconclusive

For better or for worse the U. N. security council had become wedded to the problem of what to do about Berlin, but there was no honeymoon.

Russia had boycotted the security council debate, and although Andrei Vishinsky, Soviet delegate, attended the first meeting in body he remained monstrously aloof from the proceedings in spirit.

THAT FIRST session was not only inconclusive but downright dull. No one would have thought that the 11 men mulling over this world crisis in the Chaillot palace in Paris were engaged in deliberations of so momentous a nature that they might turn the balance for peace or war in the world.

While Vishinsky sat dourly and silently—playing the part of the vicarious witness to the hilt — the American and French delegates read polite tirades against the manners and morals of Soviet motives and politics.

WHEN THE TWO western speakers were done, Juan A. Bramuglia of Argentina, acting president of the council, was forced simply to drop the whole business, temporarily at least, with a hollow thud.

After the French delegate had completed his review, Bramuglia waited expectantly for a time, then observed mildly that since he didn't seem to have any more speakers on the list the meeting would be recessed.

It appeared probable that the delegates would take considerable time for studying the charges of the U. S., Great Britain and France against Russia before meeting again. There was a possibility, too, that the security council might delay further formal meditation on the off chance that Russia might lift the Berlin blockade and the Big Four foreign ministers might take up the entire German question.

BIG FOUR:
More Talks?

Russia, whether the Kremlin admitted it or not, was dissatisfied with the way its pet Berlin situation was being handled. The Soviets wanted it out of the hands of the U. N. and in the hands of the Big Four foreign ministers.

EVEN WHILE the United Nations was deciding to discuss the issue, Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov was sending a note to the U. S, Britain and France urging that the four foreign ministers meet to consider both the Berlin crisis and the problem of Germany as a whole.

It was a peculiar development, inasmuch as it set the western nations to wondering how the Soviets could justify such a conference in view of their flagrant defection in the long, futile and disillusioning Moscow talks which had ended recently.

Molotov's note, however, claimed that the U. N. security council did not have the authority to deal either with the Berlin crisis or the overall subject of Germany.

REVIEWING the six weeks of negotiations in Moscow, the note said that the talks did not break down over a Russian demand for control of all air traffic in and out of Berlin, as the allies had contended.

All that Russia wanted, said Molotov, was some control over air transport to prevent black market money deals.

U. S. Ambassador Bedell Smith had agreed with that condition, Molotov insisted, and quoted him as saying: "It is quite understandable the Soviet government wishes to have certain guarantees against utilization of air transport for illegal currency deals or black market operations. Satisfactory guarantees of such kind could easily be secured."

IF SMITH'S statement is correct, Molotov reasoned, then the Soviet Union believes it is possible an agreement may be reached between the four powers on "a mutually satisfactory basis."

Anyway, Molotov continued righteously, he couldn't see what all the fuss was about. He claimed there was no blockade of Berlin, adding that the "defensive, protective measure" did not threaten international peace and security.

One More Alliance

Sen. Chan Gurney (R., S. D.), chairman of the senate armed services committee, has proposed a formal military alliance that would pledge the U. S. to fight if the nations of western Europe were to be attacked by Russia.

He announced that he would ask the next congress to approve his proposed alliance and to back it up with a new lend-lease program to help rearm western powers.

Ex 'Vice' Twice

Former Vice President John Garner and President Harry Truman, also a former vice president, staged a cheery reunion when Mr. Truman came to Uvalde, Tex., in the course of his pre-election campaign tour. The two are old buddies from way back, and the visit didn't hurt the President any politically, either, because Cactus Jack is a mighty popular man in Texas.

INFLATION:
What Price Bre

Ever since the price of wheat declined under the impetus of this year's bumper crop a good many inflation-harried Americans have been asking when the price of bread was going to take a corresponding drop.

The answer is that it probably won't, and the reason is that although the price of wheat is down the cost of the other basic bread ingredients are not.

BAKING INDUSTRY leaders, in a considerable ferment over recent charges that bread prices are deliberately being kept aloft, have said—and with some justification—that the present costs of bakery goods reflects "a remarkable achievement in resisting inflationary pressures."

They base this contention on bureau of labor statistics figures which show, among other things, that the baker today is paying $2.53 for the four major ingredients of bread that cost him $1.00 in 1939.

THAT FIGURES out to an increase of 153 per cent in the cost of raw materials; yet the American housewife is paying on the average only about 63 per cent more for her bread than during the 1935-39 base period used by the bureau of labor statistics in computing its cost-of-living index.

Last November, BLS figures show, flour reached a record of 164 per cent over the base period, and in December wheat of the type used for bread flour hit a record high of 214 per cent over the base. And although flour and wheat prices have slid somewhat recently, the flour used in bread now on the grocers' shelves was purchased by the baker several weeks ago when prices were up.

OF THE FOUR major bread ingredients—flour, sugar, shortening and milk—only sugar now has a lower BLS index than bread.

And still another factor which has the bread-makers beside themselves singing in the wilderness is the mounting costs of other elements involved in producing the staff of life—such as labor, machinery, distribution and packaging.

Any way you slice it, it's still inflation.

ASSISTANCE:
For President

Former President Herbert Hoover, who knows whereof he speaks when he dwells on the rigors of being the nation's chief executive, has a campaign under way now to add more members to the U. S. cabinet who could act as "operating vice presidents" assisting the president.

HOOVER IS chairman of the nonpolitical government reorganization commission which will recommend additional cabinet members to act in that capacity.

He did not specify how many will be urged beyond the present nine-man cabinet, but members of his commission said the figure under consideration was three.

"Every president has recommended additions to the cabinet," said Hoover. "There are nearly 80 independent agencies of the government running around loose in addition to the nine cabinet departments."

Members of the commission have revealed that among the additional cabinet departments that have been considered—but not decided upon—is a social security department, including public health, public works and education. They are separate bureaus now.

THE REORGANIZATION commission, which is working on all angles of government reorganization, was appointed under an act of the last congress. President Truman appointed a third of the commission and the senate and house each named a third.

LEWISIAN:
Anti-Truman

It was an accomplished fact that sooner or later John L. Lewis would have his say about the 1948 election, feeling as he obviously does that no political campaign would be complete without his having expressed an opinion on it.

At the United Mine Workers' 40th convention in Cincinnati the UMW chief shoved his foot in Mr. Truman's campaign machinery by turning a sour and sarcastic eye on the President's bid for re-election.

PRESIDENT Truman is "dangerous to the United States," said Lewis, and he had his mine worker convention delegates agreeing with him. They made it clear that they would not go along with the bulk of AFL, CIO and other independent unions now working for Mr. Truman's election.

While the delegates cheered and applauded his criticisms, Lewis declared that:

"Harry Truman is totally unfit for the position. His principles are elastic. He is careless with the truth. He has no special knowledge of anything. He is a malignant, scheming sort of individual who is dangerous not only to the United Mine Workers but dangerous to the United States of America."

PROCEEDING oratorically in this vituperative vein, Lewis devoted 25 of the 50 minutes he took for his speech to derogating the President in general and specific terms.

He charged that Mr. Truman vetoed the Taft-Hartley labor law only "for the record of his campaign." He said the President prosecuted the mine workers and had them fined twice "because he was too cowardly to send me to jail."

"I WAS WISHING he would put me in jail," Lewis went on reminiscently, "which is what a white man would have done rather than rob you."

John L. Lewis was saving his opinions on Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, the Republican candidate, for a later phase of the UMW convention.

Lewis doesn't especially like Dewey, either.

Statesman

Cordell Hull, former secretary of state, observed his 77th birthday anniversary quietly at Bethesda naval hospital where he has been a patient for the last two years since his retirement from the high public office. Doctors told him he would be able to leave the hospital soon.

URANIUM:
New Find

Practically nobody, except the people who look for it and work with it, knows much about uranium—the raw material of splitting atoms—but the world-wide search for that metal is constant, often frenetic and of inestimable importance.

CLAIMS THAT "another uranium deposit has been discovered" are becoming more and more frequent. And more often than not, the discovery flops completely. Or if it does turn out to be a possible source of supply the whole thing is immediately wrapped in atomic secrecy and the world hears nothing more about it.

The latest of these discoveries, announced recently by Columbia university, might turn out to be productive enough to be of vast significance to the world.

SCIENTISTS have unearthed a new, green mineral which was found clinging to mine walls in the Belgian Congo. It is a relative of the yellow carnotite, from which the U. S. gets its domestic uranium in the Rocky mountains. Carnotite is one of the two best sources of the atomic element, uranium.

Whether the green mineral is plentiful is not yet known. It now is being analyzed at Columbia university. Like the yellow carnotite, it contains about 60 per cent uranium.

If the new mineral proves a good uranium source, the discovery might be the most important of its kind since the atomic bomb first burst upon the world. More than 100 minerals containing uranium are known, but the element has been too difficult to extract.

FOOD, COAL:
Root of Evil

Two shortages, food and coal, are responsible for most of the discomfort and quite a few of the major troubles in the world, a report by the United Nations economic affairs department says.

Scarcity of basic foods and coal have lamed reconstruction efforts, provided an impetus to inflation and generally upset the world's economy by reducing human strength to work and produce.

Parapsychology Could Do Just Fine on Election Bets

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—It won't be long now before you'll be able to settle those election bets.

A few days after the release of the official record of the negotiations with the Russians over the Berlin situation, I was sitting in the club with a couple of members of the Democratic administration. Talk had grown pretty tall in Paris and that morning, every other person I met, it seemed, asked me: are we going to have war?

But Washington was as calm as a sleeping tabbycat. The club dining room window was open, and a lazy autumn sun sweeped down through the trees of the park. Squirrels loafed around, showing little or no interest in preparing for the winter, and when I repeated the question I had heard so often that morning to my two Democratic friends, it aroused very little interest. Said they: "The Russians want Dewey. So we won't have war now. The Soviets know if they started a war at this time, it would cinch Truman's election."

BAUKHAGE

Naturally my friends didn't indicate that they had any doubts as to the outcome of the election, but when we started talking odds, I noticed the conversation was confined largely to the race for the senate. After all, said my friends, even some Republicans concede that Dewey might face a Democratic upper house.

It wouldn't take much of a push either way. The Democrats have 45 seats now, and the Republicans only 51. The Democrats are confident that only one or two of their candidates are in danger.

On the other hand, there are a number of stiff state fights in progress in which the Republicans are being pushed pretty hard. The Democrats feel that if they can get out a large vote in these uncertain states, they have a chance of winning the four seats that would give them the edge.

In other words the count then would be: Democrats 49; Republicans, 47. That two-vote margin wouldn't assure Democratic dominance on all senate policy matters, of course, because too many senators are given to leaping out of the party corral these days. On the other hand, many issues are bound to be settled along purely partisan lines. But far more important, the party of the majority gains control of the senate committees.

The pre-election battles in which the Democrats seem to have the edge are in Oklahoma, West Virginia, Wyoming, and Kentucky. About in that order. Also Minnesota, Illinois, Iowa, and Idaho.

The Democrats admit their weakest points are in Montana and Colorado. The Republicans by no means concede New Mexico, Rhode Island, and Tennessee, but the Democrats don't seem too worried about those states.

At this writing, it is useless to make predictions, for even between this calm moment and the time these lines are in print, skies may fall or some individual may stub his toe. Bets are collected after, not before, elections.

It is fortunate, of course, that all writers as well as all bettors are not equipped with extra-sensory powers. If and when the day comes when we are, the fun will be taken out of reading, writing, and betting.

And that day may come, believe it or not. I feel quite positive from the scientific proof offered, that most of the various forms of the supernatural are untenable. But, after attending a couple of lectures and reading considerable material on "parapsychology," I have become convinced that certain things MAY exist which are at present considered impossible.

I refer to extra-sensory perception, clairvoyance, and psychokinesis. And I see no reason why more scientists shouldn't give these subjects a more thorough looking-into than they have deigned to indulge in up to now. Some have.

Dr. J. B. Rhine, director of the parapsychological laboratory at Duke university, has been conducting experiments along these eerie lines for nearly two decades. He is a very modest man, and he leans over backward to avoid offering any conclusions or making any flat statements concerning these experiments.

I have read his book(heard him speak to an intimate group, take part in a forum and later answer questions at a private gathering under the auspices of the Washington Society for Parapsychology.

For almost two decades, as I said, Dr. Rhine and his assistants have been trying to determine whether or not there is a scientific basis for telepathy (the transfer of thought from one human brain to another); clairvoyance (the ability to visualize things or events taking place beyond the vision or knowledge); or for that ability which may involve both of the former, precognition—the ability to predict things which will occur in the future.

And also psychokinesis, the hardest one of all for the cynical to swallow. That is the power of mind over matter, e.g. ability to make dice fall the way you want them to by thinking at them.

Roughly, this is an example of what has been done by Dr. Rhine and others. After long experiment and mathematical calculation, it is determined that by chance alone anybody can pick correctly five cards out of a pack of 25. That is just guessing, and it is even money the subject can do it.

If he is right oftener (and may have been right consistently more often than five in 25) that is MORE than chance. If he is right often enough, it is said that he has extrasensory perception. In other words, he is able to perceive what the card is without the use of his senses, but rather by some undefined, unmeasured, unclassified ability which science as yet cannot explain.

Clairvoyance is a common experience. An example might be of the mother who has a vivid and alarming impression of a train wreck. It may be a nightmare, a waking hallucination, or just an intuition. The wreck seems to be connected with her son, perhaps with some definite place like a tunnel It turns out later that her son was actually injured in a wreck at the spot where her dream assigned it.

Careful checking of such experiences is now going on, and Dr. Rhine feels that the results in these cases too, appear to show that some unknown process is involved, unexplained in terms of our ordinary senses.

As to psychokinesis, experiments have seemed to prove that dice rolled in a mechanical cage could be made to fall, oftener than they would by the laws of chance, according to the way the subject wished them to fall.

Dr. Rhine and his associates are trained psychologists. They say they are not trying to convince anyone that the above-mentioned qualities are actually possessed by certain individuals, but they are trying to investigate their apparent existence.

And Now a Book On John Garner

I had another adventure which might be called parapolitical. There was nothing psychic about it, but it included a piece of hindsight that is interesting.

The hindsight is that of former Speaker of the House and Vice-President John Nance Garner. He said he wished he had never left the house of representatives to run for vice-president. He felt that if Franklin Roosevelt had had a man like Speaker Joe Cannon in the speaker's chair—a no-man—Roosevelt could have avoided some of the mistakes Garner thinks he made. In other words, Garner would have liked to play Cannon to Roosevelt.

This came out in connection with a gathering of a few of the news friends of that over-six-feet-tall-Texan who looks like Abraham Lincoln and talks like Will Rogers. A man who was brought up on a ranch, but thought cows were a novelty until he was 10 because all they raised on his father's ranch were buffalo. He is Washington correspondent for more dailies than any one I ever heard of, and once we wangled him one vote for the vice-presidential nomination for the lark of it. Now he's author of a book.

I'm talking about Bascom Timmons and his book, "Garner of Texas," the only complete record of that fiery gentleman from Uvalde whose record for integrity and political ability in the house of representatives is one few can rival.

"Timmy" wrote it from his own notes and absolutely free hand. He probably knows Garner better than anyone on earth. It's a good book It contains many interesting things including the "hindsight" I quoted.

Timmons is not only popular among newsmen, but he's popular with congressmen, presidents, cops and cats. One of his cats had its portrait painted by Howard Chandler Christy; another was operated on by a specialist at Johns Hopkins, both thereby setting up feline records in their respective fields, as their master has in his. If you're interested in "Garner of Texas," you'll be interested in what Timmons of Texas has to say about him

"Didja see where we've got controls back on installment buying?"

"Yeah. You can't make time payments any more without you put up 50 per cent margin."

"What was the idea putting 'em back again?"

"With daylight saving ended there will be more inflation or something, I guess."

"People are tightening up. It's being felt in the auto business so much that the big dealers have decided to cut out two colors in 1949 models. Did you read about the new car with a luminous body?"

"You mean a car made out of luminous metal?"

"No; it's a paint that makes a car glow at night."

"What's the idea?"

"You can see another car miles away without just depending on its headlights to blind you. It's going to cause a lot of trouble in water-front parking spaces. Luminous necking will never be popular, no matter what colors it is in."

"What do you think of the Hyderabad situation?"

"Notre Dame is always changing quarterbacks I lose track of the names"

"Didja see where the Palais de Chaillot meeting is on with a record attendance?"

"Yeah If it's a success over in Paris they may bring it to this country"

"What do you make out of Clay's air lift?"

"I don't think Harry Truman can get in even if he uses it."

"Are you following the political campaign?"

"Only by hearsay It's good to see the railroads neutral. They're giving both Dewey and Truman all the locomotives they can be photographed in."

"How're you voting?"

"I dunno whether to vote for Truman and less snow on the video screens or go for Dewey and the return of the two-dollar dinner"

"What about Henry Wallace?"

"He's all right, but only in a Disney short."

"Are you paying much attention to that spy probe? I see they grilled a millionairess on giving money to Communist agents."

"I see she refused to answer on new grounds."

"What grounds?"

"On the grounds what she takes off her income tax is her own business!"

"What do you think of the U. N. doings in Paris?"

"It looks like it will go the full seven games"

"I see where the un-American committee is still probing scientists."

"Yeah. And I can't understand why President Truman in that western speech said Wall street was sticking a pitchfork in their backs."

Sportlight by Grantland Rice

THE leaves are just beginning to turn red and gold. The 1948 baseball campaign is over. But the surest sign of the end is the clarion call that rings across the landscape —"Wait Till Next Year."

What about next year? What can be done over a winter to make the White Sox, Cubs, Phillies, Reds, Browns and Tigers look vaguely like major league teams? Who is going to whittle those killing margins of 35 and 40 games away from the teams at the top?

DI MAGGIO

The gaps in the American league especially are worse than disgraceful. Some of the American league teams wouldn't run 1-2-3 in several of the stronger minor leagues. They are parasites, willing to live off the money they draw from better teams, but not willing to spend important cash to keep in the race.

The second division of the National league has far better ballplayers than the second division of the American. At least such teams as the Phillies and the Reds made attempts to get better ballplayers —such as Richie Ashburn, Hank Sauer, Virgil Stallcup and others. Both teams should have finished better than they did.

It has been something of a shock to see Chicago, with two clubs crawling along in the mire, offering a stout defense for the two cellar championships. Both Cubs and White Sox have been terrible all the year.

Washington has been a joke. It is hardly a good minor league outfit.

All Teams Need Talent

Every team in the league will need new talent. They all need pitchers—especially pitchers who know in what county the home plate is located. The Braves need outfield speed and outfield arms. The Red Sox need four or five good, dependable pitchers. There is a heavy deficit in catchers. The crop is running thin.

There is a definite need for better physical conditioning. Few ballplayers know what real condition means. This goes for legs and arms.

The Pirates proved what smart management and a sack full of doubloons could do in a year—from a tie for last place up to a hot spot in pennant contention.

A smart, aggressive front office can make a big difference. A stupid, timid front office can wreck any team. And there are more than a few of the latter brand now operating. You can look at the standing of the clubs and at least guess who most of them are.

We'll take up the case of the American league first:

Yankees—First of all, the Yankees need Bucky Harris Harris has been one of the best in the game It would be a baseball crime to let him go, an act of complete stupidity. After this, the Yankees need infield and pitching help badly. At least two harder hitting infielders and at least two new dependable pitchers.

Their outfield is high grade, but their catching isn't any too hot. And Joe DiMaggio is getting no younger.

Pitchers for Red Sox

Red Sox—At least three good pitchers in addition to the crop they have—which has been forced to depend on Red Sox hitting power Even two good additional pitchers would be enough.

Indians—Less than any other American league club. The Indians can use some outfield help, one more infielder and another good pitcher

Athletics—Just about double the speed they now have. Far too slow Joost and Majeski hardly likely to repeat 1948's brilliant play.

Tigers—The biggest disappointment in baseball. Still have a fine pitching staff. Someone should clean out most of the others by sales and trades. Club spirit poor. Present squad is going nowhere.

Browns, White Sox, Senators —Browns much the best of these derelicts. They have some good ballplayers. White Sox and Senators will need heavy cash and several years to reach even partial respectability. They will likely continue to be clinging parasites, living on the rest of the league—practically beyond all hope for a long time to come.

Here are a few National league's needs for 1949:

The Braves—More outfield speed and better throwing arms. Pitching help to relieve Sain and Spahn, two fine workmen. At least two new dependable pitchers needed badly.

The Dodgers—They were easily the best team in the league this season by six or seven games. Just keep what they have and use it intelligently, which Brooklyn didn't do this season.

To Relieve Your Cough, Mix This Recipe, at Home

You'll be surprised how quickly and easily you can relieve coughs due to colds, when you try this splendid recipe. It gives you about four times as much cough medicine for your money, and you'll find it truly wonderful.

Make a syrup by stirring 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water a few moments, until dissolved. No cooking needed—it's no trouble at all. (Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.) Then put 2½ ounces of Pinex (obtained from any druggist) into a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. This makes a full pint of medicine that will please you by its quick action. It never spoils, and tastes fine.

This simple mixture takes right hold of a cough. For real results, you've never seen anything better. It loosens the phlegm, soothes the irritated membranes, and eases the soreness.

Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its quick action in coughs and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way.

HI-SCHOOL HI-LIGHTS

Come one, come all to the Junior Class Play. It is to be presented Wednesday night the 29th of October. "Mother Does The Talking" is a comedy in 3 acts and from what we hear it is really supose to be good. The usual race is officially on, that is, which team can sell the most tickets. This time it is the girls against the boys and the losing team has to give the winning team a party, just to show their sportmanship, that is.

We wish to welcome our new member of K. H. S. It is Sylvia Egeland and she is a Junior. We're glad to have Sylvia and we're sure that after she gets used to us, she'll like us just as well. But one thing sure seems funny to us, that the girl population increases by leaps and bounds and the boy situation stays just the same.

From most reliable sources reporting, the school house that has been moved in, will be ready for use some time next week. It is to be used for Manual Training and although it seems impossible, for band also.

Just to relieve some of the parents' minds, the teachers decided that only two grades would be given in deportment this year. Some of the parents were no doubt shocked when they saw the U on their sons' and daughters cards, but it was divided in such a manner that all the grades above a C got an S and all below, got a U.

SENIOR INTERVIEW

Phyllis Boland, our "study bug" of the class, is the subject of this week's interview. She was born June 21, 1931. She says she likes all kinds of sports and her favorite subject is history. She seems to think her hobby is reading. But, we know what she means, studying, and trys to make it sound different. Her eyes are definitely brown and her hair is even a shade darker. She wants to be a teacher and sumprisingly enough her favorite song is, "12th Street Rag" by Pee Wee Hunt.

INQUIRING REPORTER

Question: What changes do you think would help Klemme High?
Answers:

Freshman-Lucille Preibe- I think we ought to have Girls Basketball since the boys have it.

Sophomore - Darlene Bachman to have the pupils keep the school (building neater).

Junior-Dick Kaduce - I think the teachers should help the students who are getting poor grades in their subjects.

Senior-Irene Lyons - To have more cooperation between the teachers and pupils.

Teacher - Mr. Ahrenkiel - I think Klemme is O. K. the way it is.

GOSSIP ! !

I wonder how come M. J. sits by L. P. in the Study Hall?

Wonder why D. T. likes to visit her aunt at Goodell?

Is P. G.'s interest in Forest City really skating?

H. A. must have a heavy crush on a girl in the country whose initials are D. P.

SPORTS

The season tickets for the 1948-1949 basketball season have been printed and will go on sale soon. So let's all get behind the Shamrocks this year and see them win each game.

Yours for the Asking

Maybe you can't tell a book by its cover, but you can guess what kind of a party it's going to be by the invitation. If it's just one of those straight-forward "Come to the party" jobs, you can expect the usual. But if it's any of these bids with a bang, anything can happen. And it usually does!

In the Bag—A brown paper bag, tied with a gay ribbon to which is attached your name, is delivered mysteriously to your house or shoved into your locker. On opening it, you find lots of little pieces of paper, folded tightly. On each is written another fact about the party; where, what, when — and even "why." On one piece is a number with instructions that you bring it to the party in order to match up with your partner. Sounds like a big deal. Wish we could crash!

Color Bind—A little ribbon bow on your invitation establishes your color for the evening You are instructed to wear the bow in your hair; your partner is told to wear a tie of the same color. Unless you're color blind, you should have no trouble finding him.

Formal Fun—Your hostess has cut out photos of teenagers in lush formals and pasted them on the invitation to indicate that you're to be a teen queen for a night. Even the simplest evening becomes an enchanted ball when you swish around in something floor length and floaty.

Ghost Writing—Write your invitation invisibly with lemon juice and send along instructions to apply a hot iron to the paper. It's counter-spy stuff!

Q. Our family name is Patrick. We are thinking of naming our infant daughter Patricia. Do you think the two names would go well together?—Mrs. W. P.

A. Patricia Patrick would make a pleasant-sounding name. However, Patricia and Patrick have the same meaning: "noble; patrician." But to me that is no serious objection. Patricia is pronounced: puh-TRISH-uh.

Q. Does Carmen Miranda's name have any meaning?—L. T.

A. It does, and, whether by design or coincidence, the name could hardly be more appropriate for a singer. Carmen means "song." Miranda means "worthy of admiration."

Q. A friend insists that Ulysses S. Grant was not the correct name of the eighteenth president. How can that be so?—Mrs. J. M. V.

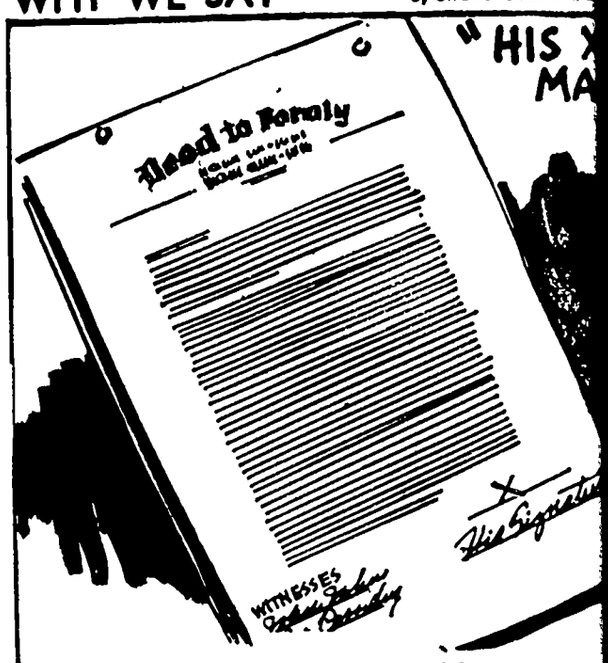
WHY WE SAY

by STAN J. COLLINS & L



Those who cannot write, sign with an "X" or crossmark because of a pious custom begun by the early Saxons. They placed a cross after all signatures as a symbol of good faith, a sort of oath on the Cross. The illiterate used only the "X".

BETTER ORPHAN CARE

A "mother" is to be provided for every 10 of the institutionalized homeless children in Britain under a new government plan to abolish the traditional orphanages. This "mother," officially a "house mother," will look after every detail in the lives of her 10 children exactly as if they composed a family, and eventually each unit of 10 may have a house of its own.

House mothers will be trained in a 14-month course. Women between the ages of 18 and 35 are eligible.

THE END OF THE LINE

By CHARLES S. PARK

Nogales was the end of the line for John Todd, and he arrived there in a blaze of glory the citizenry would never forget.

Nogales, end of the line.

When the three-car train pulled slowly alongside the tile-roofed, stone depot building and stopped, John Todd moved tiredly from his seat and from the car. Within him was a strange depression; a feeling that for him, too, this was "the end of the line."

He walked away from the tracks, a tall figure in big city dress that hung on his thin frame poorly. He followed the traffic and made his way through the gate in the International Fence. Long legs carried him past the slower moving, dark-clad Mexican women returning from their marketing in Arizona stores. He had seen them before He was not curious But he envied them the comfort of the homes they would go to, though they might be only mud huts, with roofs that leaked and windows patched against the weather.

He carried no luggage, so the Mexican customs men barely glanced his way, and then nodded him through. He knew where he was going; this was all a part of the plan. A plan only half-formed, perhaps, but one that had been long in the back of his mind. All he needed to carry it out was nerve. Desperation was taking care of that.

His hands had a new tremor To still it he shoved them deep into the pockets of his slack coat. Fumbling there, they found pipe and tobacco. He stopped, stepped out of the moving pedestrian traffic into the vestibule of a curio store, loaded and lit up. With the pipe clenched between his teeth and drawing well, he glanced over the passersby It was funny, he was always looking for a familiar face, yet even friends were of no use now He knew what he had to do and at last, his mind was made up.

There was even more purpose in his stride as he left his temporary shelter and headed across the street to the ticket office of the Mexican railroad. He was a young man, yet hollow cheeks and graying temples made him appear much older He looked as sick as he was Well, South Mexico was his last hope, just as far south as he could get. They said there was health to be had in the hot, high climates

But it was here in Nogales that the trail branched Even in Mexico, where it was said one could live so big on so little money would be necessary Almost his last cent went for the railroad passage, but he knew where there was more for the taking So with the ticket safely in an inner pocket he moved out into the Sonora sunset, found a place to sit to rest and to wait, and gave himself up to his own bitter thoughts

Somewhat later he looked up to find a swift-coming night had fallen. He was worried that perhaps he had dallied too long He pulled roughly away from a small and very dirty shine boy who tugged at his sleeve He walked across the street, back into the United States, and moved by the border officials with his new assurance to hurry down the main street of the little Arizona border town He glanced into darkened store windows, looked into shadows, testing and feeling the night and the tenor of the town with his senses.

He walked past an open door; the neatly lettered sign that hung above it read: "Money Exchange." His heart action quickened as he looked inside.

The room was divided by a high counter. Behind were two objects that called for his attention. One; an open safe. The other; a dark-haired girl in a red dress.

She was counting out money to a couple of tourists. Todd knew that under the counter and in the safe there were racks of silver and bills of all denominations.

He hoped his nerve would hold up, to provide support yet a little longer as he continued down the block. He crossed a street and entered a small park. He seated himself on a bench.

The streets were gradually emptying. A police prowl car eased quietly by and its occupants turned their heads to look at him. He stared back. Yet at the same time he felt a coldness around his heart. Two border patrolmen passed in a jeep and he was conscious of their scrutiny

Down the street the lights in the money exchange went dim. He rose from the bench and stepped out briskly. The prowl car had turned the corner, the patrol jeep was out of sight. Todd judged the distance to the International Line; noticed with satisfaction that the officials had all moved inside their guardhouse A quick move a fast sprint, and the business would be done. Once across the line he could easily lose himself among the shadows between the adobe buildings, and as easily stay hidden until train time.

TURNING abruptly into the Money Exchange he saw the girl in the red dress coming toward the counter with a tray of money from the safe Her eyes were very wide, very brown, and she was very pale In front of the counter, his back toward Todd, there stood a man. A tardy customer, perhaps, but desperation told Todd it was too late now to back out.

He gripped the pipe in his pocket and poked the stem of it against the cloth convincingly. He curbed the fine tremor that was coming back to his fingers and spoke in a voice made harsh and sharp by the urgency of the moment.

"Put that down and raise your hands."

The man at the counter jerked around. His hand stabbed out. Todd felt a tearing, ripping sensation high in his chest even as the shrill bark of a small caliber pistol hit his ears. In a continued motion, the man broke into a dash for the door.

Only instinctive reaction made Todd stick out a long leg and trip him up. The same motivation caused him to dive forward onto the prostrate figure, to scramble for the little gun and wrench it from temporarily limp fingers. The heavy blow delivered to the base of the man's skull with the butt of the pistol was a part of the same pattern.

It was then that realization caught up with Todd, He arose slowly, feeling the pain in his chest a sudden, live thing. He moved back to the counter; leaned against it. The room became a whirling wheel, and he its hub.

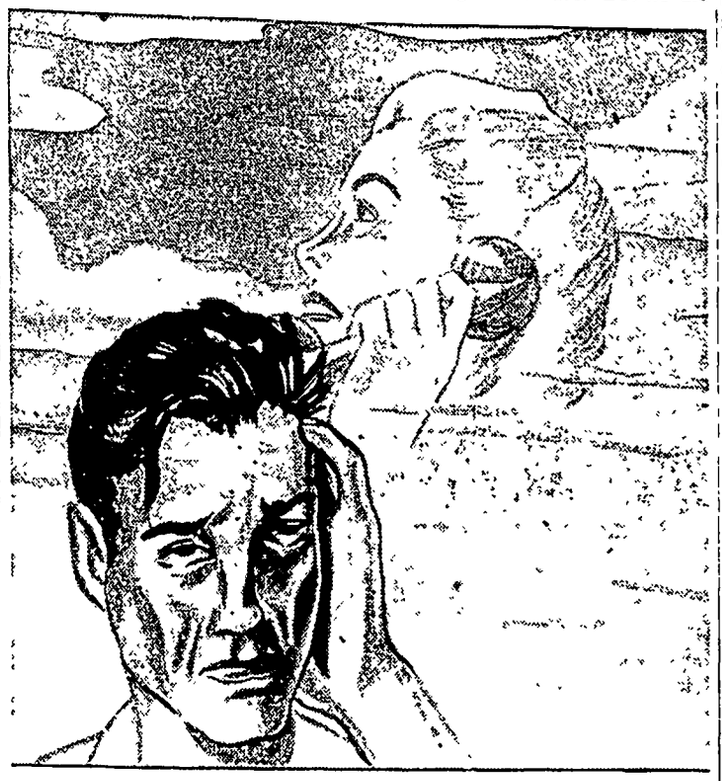
He never heard the girl speak into the telephone. The shriek of a siren was only a high note piercing the roaring in his ears. But he did feel her nearness, the press of her body when she moved around the counter and placed arms about him to hold him erect. His knees were giving away. Except for her he would have fallen.

He was aware of other people in the room. But it was her voice to which he was listening—a soft, murmuring kind of a voice, full of compassion. He didn't struggle when he felt the blackness coming on him. It was better so. It was better to go now, in the arms of a lovely, sympathetic stranger, than to hang on a few feeble months more in a foreign land. Finally to die alone and unmourned.

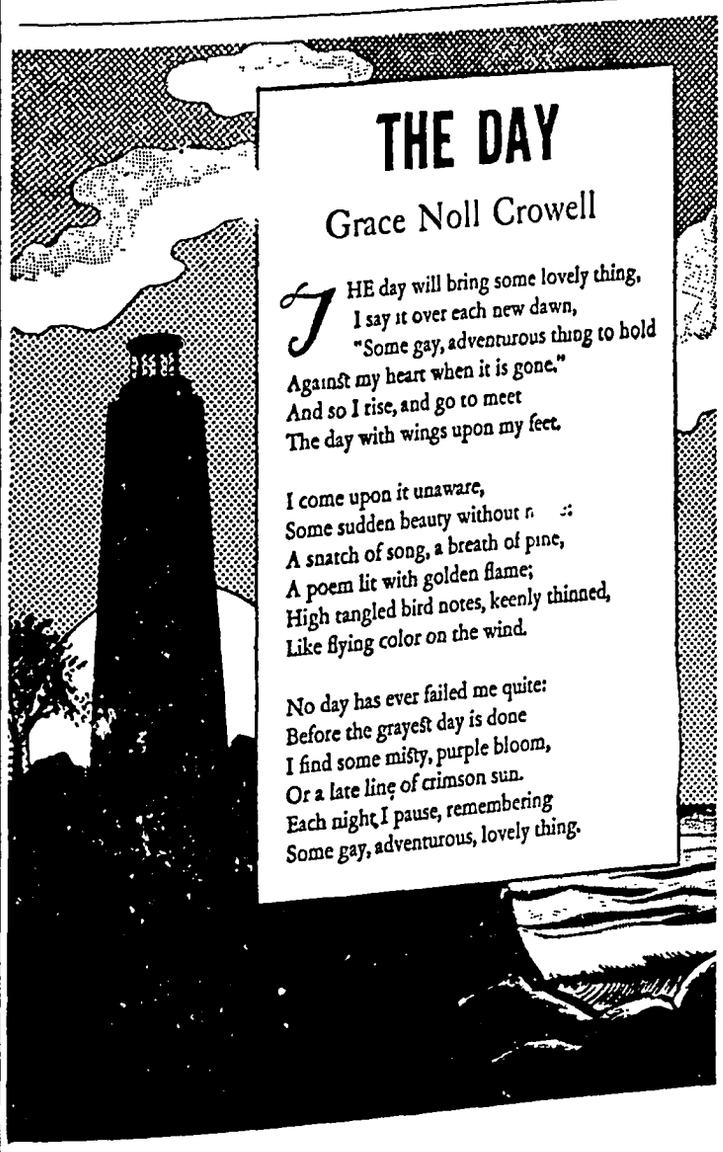
And how infinitely much better to go this way, clean. Life had given him the best of the deal, after all.

The policemen looked down at the still figure lying in the girl's arms, at the ugly purple hole high in the bony, bared chest. One asked the room in general· "Who would have thought a sick old bum would have the guts to try to stop a hold-up with a pipe?"

An enigmatic smile lay across the lips of the dead John Todd. That was his only answer.



The room became a whirling wheel, and he its hub.



THE DAY

Grace Noll Crowell

THE day will bring some lovely thing,
I say it over each new dawn,
"Some gay, adventurous thing to hold Against my heart when it is gone."
And so I rise, and go to meet
The day with wings upon my feet.

I come upon it unaware,
Some sudden beauty without name;
A snatch of song, a breath of pine,
A poem lit with golden flame;
High tangled bird notes, keenly thinned,
Like flying color on the wind.

No day has ever failed me quite:
Before the grayest day is done
I find some misty, purple bloom,
Or a late line of crimson sun.
Each night I pause, remembering
Some gay, adventurous, lovely thing.

True Wisdom

Lesson for October 31, 1948

WHAT is the most important thing in the world? What is worth more than anything else? Some would say Money; some Power; some Goodness; some Truth. Another answer is given by the writers of a group of books, two of which are included in our Bible "Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom," they say.

Dr. Foreman

The books of Proverbs and Ecclesiastes in our Protestant Bible, and the books of Ecclesiasticus and the Wisdom of Solomon in the Apocrypha all have this viewpoint and are therefore called the Wisdom Literature.

Other writers in the Bible divide the human race into the Good and the Wicked, or the Believers and the Unbelievers, but these writers see mankind as the Wise and the Foolish. The books they wrote (especially Proverbs) were intended particularly for those who are so far neither foolish nor wise—that is to say, the young

Knowledge Is Not Wisdom

WISDOM (as these writers use the word) is not the same thing as knowledge A person may know a great many things and still be a fool. Or he may not even know how to read and write, and yet be wise Some modern writer has said: Knowledge is knowing what to do, skill is knowing how to do it; and virtue is doing it. Wisdom is all of these put together

But the special feature of the "Wisdom Writers" is this: True wisdom begins with the fear of God. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom . . the knowledge of God is understanding." In other words, wisdom without religion, without faith, is foolish after all.

We can see how in our times the story of the Nazis has shown this once more to be true The German Reich of 1935-1939 had the best of the science of the world; they had scholarship and wealth and "know-how" in many fields; but they rejected God and defied his church—and so a nation was destroyed

We too may profit by their example We of the western nations have wealth and technical skills beyond any other peoples, we have the atom bombs—but have we the wisdom without which all these things are but as torches in the hands of madmen?

University on Ant-Hill

KNOWLEDGE may be expensive It costs a great deal of money to know what it takes to be an engineer or a surgeon. Wisdom, strange to say, is less expensive. It is in fact on such a low shelf that most people pass it by.

Consider where the "Wisdom Writers" tell us we may learn wisdom One place is experience "Experience keeps an expensive school, but fools will learn in no other—and hardly from that," says a more modern proverb

Many of the proverbs in our Bible are simply distilled drops of experience. "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger," for example. Do you need an angel from the sky to tell you that?

Another source of wisdom is just Nature herself. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard (lazy fellow); consider her ways and be wise." A lazy man is a fool, but how shall he learn to be wise? Not by reading books—just by watching the ants.

Inspired Common Sense

A FORMER governor of Virginia used to say that during his term of office he received more practical help from reading Proverbs than from any of the books on political science in his library. For the science, or the art, of government is simply one specialized form of that most important art, getting along with people. And the Wisdom Literature shows us how it is done.

Some people think that Inspiration is always mysterious, and that the Holy Spirit would not stoop to inspire what we could learn in any ordinary way. But the Christian church, when it declares Proverbs (for example) inspired, expresses her belief that there is such a thing as Inspired Common Sence.

God may speak to us, and does speak—if we will listen—in the advice of our parents, in our everyday experiences, in the hard-working ant and the majesty of the soaring eagle. All truth is God's truth, even when we find it in our own backyard.

More Mealtime Menaces.

Ever since we printed a list of six types of lunch-room pests, we've been deluged with letters describing additional types we overlooked, along with that four-leaf clover you're always singing about. If you recognize yourself in these descriptions, you'd better F. F. F. F. T. (and if you don't know, that F. F. F. F. F. T. means "Fall Fatally on Your Fat Face Five Times").

The Thinker—He works his way doggedly to the counter in the line (you're just a few behind him) and then pauses for Station Announcement, or something. Seems he never can decide beforehand, so you have to wait until he makes up his alleged mind. But by that time the bell is about ready to ring.

The Critic—He doesn't like what you have on your plate—and doesn't hesitate to tell you so in the most unappetizing term. Comparing your tapioca to fish eyes and your spaghetti to worms doesn't help your appetite one bit. It doesn't help his popularity, either.

The Sob Sister—All during lunch period, when you want to relax and have fun, she insists upon pouring out her troubles to you. The only happy ending you can be sure of is the bell.

The Whisperers—Just your luck to sit next to two best friends who are in a confidential mood. That means they whisper furiously to each other all through the meal, leaving you out in the cold completely to feel like an interloper.

chell Bock Has Most Modern Dairy Barn & Equipment In Iowa

KING PARLOR" TEM USED AT OCK FARM

ORD IN DAIRY MENT FOUND ON ARM NEAR KLEMME

ory begins back in 1926 hn Bock, Fred Greiw. H. Greiman made Minnesota to look over cle. They were greatred with the fine Hols they saw and purr car load of the best Holsteins they could that time there were Holsteins in this part cle, but these men saw cture in the dairy busieach of the three farmto build up a Holstein ed with the cattle they ased.

d Mrs. John Bock had ldren: Edwin F. now of in the automobile, oil sport business; Stella, Lyle Burr of Ogden, d Mitchell, still on the m.

the story of Mitchell, boy was a farmer at who was greatly inhis father's fine herd which Mr. Bock conbuild up. Mr. Bock of the first members of ding association and the m with the exception f years, has always mber of the Cow Testciation.

d graduated from the High School in the 1934. After his father's then took over the of the farm and the ess. His mother kept him for a time until into her new home in which had just been rchen Mr. Bock died. has lived in Klemme next few years Mitta married couple to farm and later built house. He was married nd Mr. and Mrs. Bock children, Jimmie 4 t. Mrs. Bock is likeested about the dairy nd helps her husband work.

BUYS PURE BRED STOCK

To bring his dairy herd up to top-notch, Mitchell purchased some fine pure bred stock last winter. His best cow averages 715 pounds of butterfat. His herd bull comes from a long line of high producing stock. On the dam side his 7 nearest dams average 703 pounds of butterfat, while on his sire's side, his 7 nearest dams averaged 900 pounds of butterfat. The Bocks are now milking 16 cows. They find a ready market for their bull calves, but are keeping their fine heifer calves in the herd

Mitchell smiled when he told this writer about purchsing a cow last winter. Somebody wanted that particular cow and kept raising the bid. Mitchell really had to dig down deep to buy her and later learned that he was bidding against the Maytag representative who wanted the cow for their great herd.

Besides dairying, Mr Bock farms the home place of 120 acres as well as his own farm nearby of 120 acres. He has also been doing custom silo filling and combining but hinted that he is going to give up this work to devote more time to dairying.

Remodels Dairy Barn

Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell Bock began to plan their dairy barn last winter and spent many evenings figuring how the barn could be made into a modern dairy barn. They drew up plans, discarded them for better ones and were still undecided just what they needed.

Last spring they got really interested and found where they could find modern dairy barns. The nearest were up in Minnesota and several dairies were visited after which they put together the best featurs of all of them and then planned the dairy they now operate

To begin with Mr Bock rebuilt his present barn replacing the old foundation and about 8 feet of cement blocks with building tile blocks The windows about the barn were replaced with glass blocks and a ventilating and air-conditioning system installed. All the stanchions were torn out and the interior of the barn cleared to make a "loafing barn." (That is a new wrinkle the writer had never heard of before.) Last winter the temperature varied only 3 degrees in the "loafing barn."

The next step was to build an addition to the south side of the barn to house the "milking parlor" which is 12x36 feet, and the milk house room, which is 12x14. (By the way, these two rooms are clean as kitchens and many housewives would like to have the equipment that is in the milk house in their own kitchen.) This new addition is built of building blocks and the windows are glass blocks. The interior is painted a gleaming white enamel and is kept that way. Fluorescent light makes both the "parlor" and the milk house bright as day This addition is also ventilated and air-conditioned and there is no trace of barn odor, although the cows are on the other side of the wall, "loafing."

The George Smith family lives in the tenant house on the farm and Mr. Smith devotes a great deal of his time to the dairy end of farming and is greatly interested in the work. Mrs. Bock takes care of the milk house. (We would rather call it the "dairy kitchen and cooling room")

In the "loafing barn," there is running water and the cows have drinking cups and are fed from feed bunks along the wall. They get their "dessert," we would call it, when they are being milked. We will tell about this later when describing the equipment. The dairy cows go through the same routine as is used at Iowa State College.

Your Pasteurized Milk

The milk produced at the Bock farm goes to the Klemme Cooperative Creamery, where it is pasteurized and bottled and then delivered to your door or to your grocer.

Every precaution is used to keep the milk santitary at the Bock farm. The cows' udders are washed before milking with a Surge milking machine, the milk is cooled with ice cold water spraying over the cans and kept at a low temperature until delivered. Everything used in the dairy is scalded and sterilized and the "milking parlor" washed with a hose and scrubbed with after each milking

Electricity Helped Pave Way

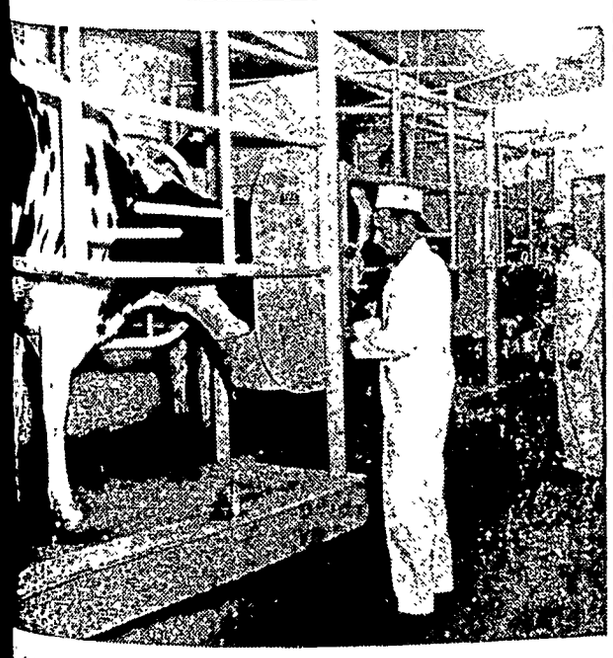
Mitchell remarked that his folks had electricity on the farm as long as he could remember, and with it they had running water on the farm and the house was modernized. Electricity was the ore factor that made it possible to go ahead and install a modern dairy barn and equipment. Without electricity, this modern dairy could not have been possible. The cows are even treated to radio music while being milked and they really are contented!

Many Visitors Come To Farm

Word has spread among top dairymen of what has been accomplished by Mr. and Mrs. Bock and they have had visitors from Minnesota, Wisconsin, and South Dakota, and many from all parts of the state of Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Bock have the only modern dairy barn equipment of this type to be found in North Iwa. In fact, there are but very few of this type in Iowa and Minnesota. This type of dairying can be seen at Iowa State College, but few dairymen had thought it possible that farmers could do the same.

Mr Bock explained that this system is not as expensive as it would at first seem, and that he thinks more dairy farmers will be handling their dairy work in this manner It is easier, it is absolutly sanitary and it is a real pleasure to work with a modern farm plant of this type.

The barn is equiped with a complete Surge Milking System, air conditioned with Northco System and electric Whirl-aire heaters. The milk house has a Standley milk cooler, stainless steel and a Surge, stainless steel wash tanks with 30 gallon electric hot water heater and Sani rack for milk cans.



picture of Mr. Bock (at right) and Mr. Smith was taken dern milking room. Notice the elevated stalls for the feeders and fluorescent lights.

picture of Mrs. Bock was taken in the modern milk ce the equipment in the picture, the whiteness through- glass block window.

WARNING TO HANCOCK COUNTY FARMERS

Paul Henderson warns farmers of Hancock County to be very careful about turning the cattle and horses in corn stalks because of the amount of corn left in the field from corn borer damage.

Reports of cattle dying from eating too much corn have already been reported. Forrest Bennett of Corwith reported 3 head of heifers. Mr. Bennett also reported that actual counts of fields showed a 6 to 20 bushel. ear and stalk drop per acre. Most of this was from damage by corn borer.

Check your field before turning out livestock. It will pay many of you to pick up this corn. Most of it is still in the husk and is not easily seen.

Enrollments Will Be Open In The National Benefit Hospital And Surgical Plan In Klemme

This issue of The Times carries the announcement that enrollments will be open in the National Benefit Hospital and Surgical Plan in Klemme. This plan has protected residents of many other Iowa communities.

National Benefit is now in its 42nd year of service to Iowans and their families. The home office of the company is located in Des Moines. Klemme has been selected as one of the cities to participate in this community enrollment opportunity.

The plan has been endorsed for its liberal coverages for hospital expenses and surgical bills. Many thousands of Iowans have received benefits for hospitalization or for doctors' bills incurred because of operations.

Will Interview

An accredited enrollment representative direct from the home office will interview residents of Klemme and give those who qualify the opportunity to enroll. It is intended that every home in Klemme will be contacted and the residents of this community can show their support of this enrollment opportunity by giving the accredited enrollment representative a few minutes of their time when he calls.

Every enrollment representative will carry an identification card bearing his signature and that of an officer of the company. This will be your assurance that you are being visited by an accredited enrollment representatives, directly authorized by the home office to accept enrollments from those who can qualify.

Limited Time

Because of previous arrangements, enrollments here will be available only for a limited time. Indications are that participation in the enrollment program will be extensive so those who feel they can qualify should plan to complete the arrangements as soon as possible. At the present time it is not known when enrollments will again be available to Klemme residents.

Klemme is fortunate in being selected for this great enrollment opportunity. It is especially desirable that this enrollment is sponsored by such a well-known company. The public is urged to give its utmost support during the period when enrollments are being accepted.

ELECTION RETURNS OF ELL TOWNSHIP

The Ell Township turned out with the rest of the nation for a big vote; there were 476 votes cast. From the total number cast, 66 voted straight Republican, 19 straight Democrate, one straight Prohibition, and 6 ballots were spoiled. There were 384 mixed ballots, and 25 disputed ballots.

From Ell Township, Dewey received 255, Truman 198, Tiechert 1, Watson 2, and Wallace 9, in the the Presidential race. For Senator of Iowa, Wilson had 204, Gillette 223. For Supervisor for Hancock County, Greiman received 283, Daniels received 117.

The remainder of the offices ran heavy for the Republicans, and the county offices were carried by the Republicans. In most of the county offices there was only one name on the ballot.

HANCOCK COUNTY FINAL RETURNS

The final returns for Hancock County are as follows. Presidential, Truman 3086, Dewey 2224; Senatorial, Gillette, 3284, Wilson 1994; and for County Supervisor, Daniels 2754, Greiman 1432.

TO THE CITIZENS OF HANCOCK COUNTY

Never before, in any entire year have as many cases of infantile paralysis been reported to our Iowa Department of Health as in 1948. The cost to the National Foundation for medical and hospital care in 1948 has been staggering. Here in Iowa we checked to find out what care cost per day, Monday, October 18th. On that day we had 278 patients in hospitals and the cost for one day alone was more than $4,000.00.

Most of the Chapters have exhausted their funds caring for patients and will have a list of unpaid bills for the end of the year.

We do want the public to know that we are taking care of every case in Hancock County, not partial but paying the cost of any case in full, regardless of who they are.

When the drive starts for Polio March of Dimes, remember we must have a lot of money if we continue to do this.

Roy L. McMillin, Chairman.

HARVEST HOME SUNDAY SET FOR NOV. 21

County Farm Bureau President, Jack Dethmers, this week called attention to the annual Harvest Home Sunday observance, which will be held Sunday, November 21. The special observance is state-wide and is sponsored by the Iowa Farm Bureau in cooperation with the churches, Iowa State College, newspapers and radio stations.

All ministers in the county who are associate members of the Farm Bureau have been invited by the president of the Iowa Farm Bureau to participate in the observance.

Overseas Program to collect relief goods for distribution in Europe. All goods collected will be distributed through the many church agencies.

Participating in the campaign are churches, both Protestant and Catholic.

Harvest Home Sunday has been observed annually for about 20 years. Last year several hundred churches in the state held special service.

Customerily, the 4-H members, rural youth groups, women's choruses and other farm people are asked to take part in the service.

Mr. Dethmers urged all farm folks in the county to cooperate in every way possible to make this year's observance the most extensive one in history.

Large Crowd Attended

A large crowd attended the reception at the Methodist church parlors for Rev. and Mrs. Morris Egeland, Sylvia and Noel on Friday evening.

Emil Beier acted as master of ceremony for the program. The audience joined in the singing of a couple of hymns, followed by a prayer from Rev. G. J. Hjelmaas of Crystal Lake, a longtime friend of the Egelands. A word of welcome was made by J. A. Chambers. "The New Preacher," a poem very suitable to the occasion, was read by Mrs. Roy Schaefer. A ladies sextette, consisting of Mrs. Vern Bisom, Mrs. Otto Lemke, Mrs. C. A. Arnold, Mrs. Dwight Hummel, Mrs. Roy Arnold and Mrs. Geo. Schoenwetter, sang "In the Beautiful Garden of Prayer."

Rev. C. H. Pettersen of Forest City, who grew up in the same Wisconsin community with Rev. Egeland, gave a short talk, followed by a few remarks by Rev. Egeland. The program closed with the benediction being pronounced by Rev. Pettersen.

The rest of the evening was spent in getting acquainted with the new minister and family. Ice cream and cake were served.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Proposes Moscow Mission, Rocks Foundation of U. S. Policy; Russ Ask Big Four Parley Renewal

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Bi-partisan unity in the U. S. was grievously wounded by the knife-edged Berlin crisis when, on the one hand, President Truman called a private conference with Under Secretary of State Robert Lovett and Secretary of State George Marshall to mull over the situation . . .

. . . and, on the other hand, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey summoned his foreign affairs advisor, John Foster Dulles, from Paris to find out for himself what was going on in Europe.

DIPLOMACY:
Trip Canceled

To President Truman, for engineering the abortive deal to send Chief Justice Fred Vinson to Moscow for personal talks with Kremlin leaders on the atomic bomb, went the credit for producing the most heroically proportioned diplomatic faux pas of the year.

It happened very swiftly and very simply. Mr. Truman deciding suddenly to try his own hand at straightening out the tangled foreign mess, started making preparations to send Vinson to Russia

THEN the state department heard about it. Robert Lovett, under-secretary of state, profoundly shocked, notified George Marshall who came winging frantically across the Atlantic from Paris to stop the President from committing what he considered a blunder of immense gravity.

The Vinson trip was called off, of course, and President Truman backed hastily away from the whole business after issuing an abashed note of explanation.

BUT THE memories lingered on. Mr Truman, in the minds of those who knew or thought they knew about the international situation, had gone completely beyond the pale with this momentary, headstrong effort

His campaign opponent, Gov. Thomas Dewey, at first wavered between righteous anger at what he obviously considered a deliberate flouting of the established bi-partisan foreign policy and elation that the Democratic candidate had made such a grievous tactical error

And although the Dewey camp was astute enough to realize that its cause would benefit more if it magnanimously ignored the affair than if it leaped in for the slaughter, it nevertheless redounds to the New York governor's credit that he did not take advantage of this internationally dangerous situation for his personal gain.

Significance

Why was President Truman so widely and thoroughly castigated for making what he undoubtedly looked upon as a sincere, constructive attempt to clear up the Russians' "misunderstanding" of the problem of atomic control?

Because his intention of sending Chief Justice Vinson to Moscow represented a serious divergence from the basic characteristic of U S. foreign policy—toughness with Russia.

MR. TRUMAN'S proposal amounted to a softening up of the laboriously built "get tough" attitude of the U. S. toward Moscow. It was tantamount to saying in a pleading voice, "Let's get together once more and try to talk this thing out."

Current history has proved that the kind of personal diplomacy the President sought to institute in the Vinson trip has been completely unavailing in dealing with Russia since the war. Moreover, insofar as personal diplomacy always tends to bypass the United Nations, it usually has an ill effect on international relations in general.

IN THE final analysis, a personal visit to the Kremlin by Vinson probably would have upset the entire, carefully fabricated structure of the policy upon which the U. S. is depending to defeat Russia's aims in Europe.

ANYTHING NEW

What, No War?

Answers to the question "Does Russia want war?" are a drug on the market, in informed and uninformed circles alike, but now and then someone comes up with a reply that is a little more imaginative than most.

ONE OF this kind has been furnished by an experienced professional diplomat—necessarily anonymous lest his identity become know to the Russians—who is attending the U. N. meetings in Paris. He said:

"There will be no war soon. The reason is that Stalin, the head of the peace party, has just had Andrei Zhdanov, the head of the war party, murdered."

(Zhdanov, who died several weeks ago, was one of the ranking members of the politburo where he was almost on a par with Molotov in power and influence He had been talked of as a possible successor to Stalin. His demise was mourned with parades, pageantry and ostentation by Stalin, the boys in the Kremlin and the Russian people.)

"HE (ZHDANOV) urged immediate war. He argued that if Russia was defeated militarily she would win politically, since the resulting horror and chaos would cause a new, irresistible wave of communism.

"As long as Zhdanov was successful, Stalin gave him his head. When he failed in Yugoslavia, Stalin told him to lay off. Zhdanov defied the Soviet generalissimo. So Stalin got his head.

"This means that Stalin's waiting tactics have prevailed. There will be no war soon."

BIG FOUR:
Come Again

While the U. S. state department was exerting all its influence to prevent a return to direct negotiations with Russia at this time, the Soviets were hammering away at the opposite course of action by demanding that Big Four discussions of the Berlin issue be resumed.

THE TWO viewpoints, starkly emphasized by the reception Mr. Truman's futile mission-to-Moscow idea received in the U. S., revealed with extreme clarity the broad gap now separating the East and West.

Russia's demand wasn't new. It was a repetition of Moscow's now well-established tactics in East-West relations. What the Soviets wanted was simply that the Berlin question be removed from the agenda of the U. N. security council and that discussions among the Big Four be resumed where they were severed last August in Moscow.

Andrei Y. Vishinsky, deputy Soviet foreign minister, handed a note to that effect to Juan A. Bramuglia of Argentina, acting president of the security council, who separately informed the U. S., British and French delegations.

IT WAS all wasted effort as far as the western powers were concerned. Neither the U. S., Britain nor France wanted to get within shouting distance of direct negotiations with the Russians at this point.

One western spokesman commented simply, "The Russian reply is unhelpful." The Soviets, again, were making no concession to peace.

JUST A FIRE HAZARD

'Sagging' White House Due for Repairs

This probably will cost you a million dollars.

The White House—America's home for its presidents—will undergo a series of reconstruction jobs next year that will bolster up the slightly sagging, 132-year-old executive mansion. And it is probable that the work may cost U. S. taxpayers as much as a million dollars.

W. E. Reynolds, public buildings commissioner, said a structural survey is being conducted to determine what repairs are needed.

Large scale improvements of the rambling presidential residence will have to be undertaken, Reynolds pointed out, because the building as it now stands is such a fire hazard "it would not pass the code of any single responsible city in America."

CHURCHILL:
Grim Accents

At the British Conservative party's annual convention in Llandudno, Wales, Winston Churchill, never a man to deal in flimsy optimism when the going was tough, talked in grim accents about the world's peril.

HE WAS the old pre-war, no-appeasement Churchill as he warned against letting any French breach appear in the line of western resistance to Soviet drives.

To the United States he said, in effect: Keep those atomic bombs. Destruction of the U. S. atomic arsenal now would be tantamount to suicide.

"If it were not for the stocks of atomic bombs now in the trusteeship of the United States there would be no means of stopping the subjugation of western Europe by Communist machinations backed by Russian armies and enforced by political parties.

"BOLSHEVIK Russia is already heavily armed and her forces in Europe far exceed those of all the western countries put together. At the present time the only sure foundation of peace—and the prevention of actual war—rests upon strength.

He urged the West to "bring matters to a head and make a final settlement" before Russia produces a usable bomb.

Such a settlement, according to the views of the wartime British prime minister, could be arrived at only after the Russans had released their grip on satellite states, released the German and Japanese prisoners they "now hold as slaves," ceased to "oppress, torment and exploit" those parts of Austria and Germany they hold and called a halt to disruptive operations elsewhere in the world.

BUT CHURCHILL would not be a party to issuing any "false hopes of a friendly settlement with Soviet Russia." Actually, he said, the Berlin blockade may precipitate a war at any time.

ALIENS:
On the Job

The U. S. is hiring scores of aliens, many of them in countries behind the iron curtain, to staff its 27-million-dollar international information program.

Leland J. Barrows, deputy director of the state department's office of information and education, told the senate appropriations committee that the department planned to add 278 aliens and 60 Americans to overseas duty by the end of the 1948 fiscal year.

WHAT WILL they do? Barrows said that the aliens—14 of whom will be added to the American embassy in Moscow—would be used primarily as translators, clerks, messengers and in other work associated with the U. S. foreign information program.

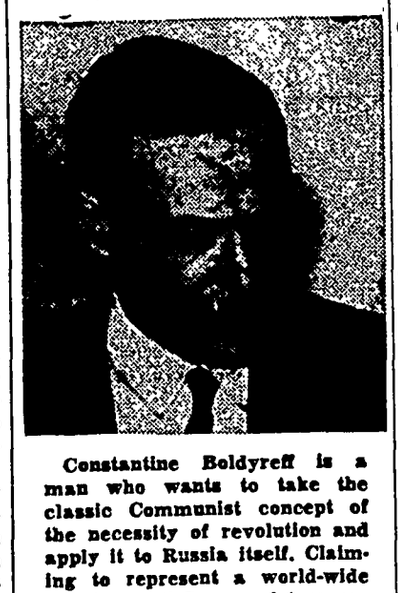
Testimony before the committee showed that the state department gained the committee's reluctant approval of its foreign-hiring plan, despite the objections of Chairman Styles Bridges (R., N. H.) who contended that it would provide a fertile field for Communist infiltration into government functions.

GEORGE V. ALLEN, assistant secretary of state, countered that there were certain jobs that had to be performed overseas that could best be done by aliens.

He said aliens could be employed much cheaper for certain tasks where they can be watched fairly easily, even though Americans may suspect their loyalty.

This departure from the norm in the business of hiring federal employees was a new wrinkle in the government that very probably will be attracting considerable public attention within the next few months.

Reverse Russian



Constantine Boldyreff is a man who wants to take the classic Communist concept of the necessity of revolution and apply it to Russia itself. Claiming to represent a world-wide Russian anti-Communist organization dedicated to the overthrow of the Stalin regime, Boldyreff believes that the great mass of Russia's 167 million people are ready for revolt.

SUB RADAR:
Sentry Duty

A submarine with radar "eyes," a new unit in the nation's defense system, was scheduled to start operating in November to detect any hostile planes attempting a sneak approach across such remote reaches as the polar seas.

The navy announced that the submarine Tigrone, taken from the reserve fleet and converted into the first radar picket submarine, was to be commissioned November 1

Autumn Brings Washington A Potpourri of 'Occasions'

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—After a tropically terrible summer the capital burst into autumnal glory with cool weather providing the zest and zip necessary to meet the feverish renewal of activity after the summer doldrums.

Let me review some of the varied events which provided pungent relief from the news of diplomatic quarrels, political billingsgate, and war.

Out at the airport, an American Airlines plane, christened for the occasion "Don Gaspar de Portola," dropped out of the skies. Down the ramp came a black - bearded, helmeted Spanish Conquistadore, resplendent in flowing scarlet cape and shining broadsword. Next came a charming Chinese girl in her ruffled dress, alluring as a lotus blossom. Then a less exotic crowd of beauties, sportsfolk, business men, headed by the mayor of San Francisco. They had come to tell us about the resumption this year of the Portola Festival at the Golden Gate. (They visited eight other major cities, too.)

BAUKHAGE

Don Gaspar de Portola was the famous explorer who was sent to America from Spain in 1769 to chase the Jesuits from California, the English from Canada, and the Russians from Alaska. He didn't quite fill that order but he did locate and explore San Francisco Bay and discover a couple of other harbors.

I paid my respects to His Excellency Don Gaspar, to the tall, slim, pretty and modest water-nymph, Ann Curtis, Olympiad winner, and to my old pal Jimmy Abbey, one-time international photographer who made even Stalin "look pleasant." Now Jimmy is an ABC commentator on the Pacific coast.

But something better was to come. We sat down to luncheon and I felt right at home! There was Chef John Lischetti, of the Nugget Grill, founded way back in the gold rush days when nuggets were the medium of exchange. And better still there were sand-dabs, that strange flat creature sans-scales in the ocean and sans-rival when prepared "a la Pescad' oro." (Get the nugget?) But best of all was the crab salad nugget, which makes all other crabs seem crabbed by comparison. The food was all native, flown from San Francisco for the occasion!

Viva Portola!

George C. Marshall As a Humanitarian

The Marine band blares out a march from the platform overlooking the huge Presidential room of the Statler where more than 500 guests are gathered for the ceremony in which Variety International, that cheerful and charitable group of show folk, is to confer its annual Humanitarian award.

In march the guests of honor, statesmen, diplomats, tycoons, actors, legal lights, and whatnot. They stand at their places at the head tables which form two tiers banked with roses.

A fanfare and George Catlett Marshall takes his place amid cheers that drown the music. The salute to the colors. We sit down to drown any modicum of sorrow that has survived the preceding reception. Speeches are short and good. Marshall, as secretary of state, could say little that was new, something that was grim, much that was encouraging and all of it "off the record" for we are already in the midst of parlous international negotiations.

Variety club president reads the citation:

"The career of the Hon. George Catlett Marshall has embraced leadership in peace as well as in war.

"Soldier by profession, he has ever displayed a conspicuous and consistent genius for the military.

"Shunning the opportunity to seek surcease from the cumulative burdens of two world wars, his devotion to principle and country has led him along the paths toward world amity and peace since the end of hostilities.

"As author of the Marshall Plan, he translated into generous and inspiring fulfillment the shining hope for liberty, honor and dignity of free men everywhere.

"We salute the breadth of vision and warmth of heart of a great and beloved American."

And so to bed.

Review of Byrd's Antarctic Expedition

Rain pours, we drive through the slippery Washington streets to the navy yard (now the naval gun factory).

The Washington navy yard was planned by President John Adams when French aggression made "freedom of the seas" a menacing international issue. Work began on the site in 1800. Here the "Wasp" and the "Hornet" were built to play their roles in the War of 1812, here the "Constitution" and the "President" came for overhauling and repairs.

We stop at the sentry box: "Guests of Admiral Davis." The marine sentry salutes. We know our way to the officers' club. Handshakes and refreshments and into a bus that takes us to the event of the evening which the rain prevented us from witnessing aboard the hulking LST moored to the dock in the Anacostia river.

So we must go indoors to see one of the most thrilling things I ever saw on the screen. A motion picture made from the actual photographic record of the 1946-47 exploration of the Antarctic under Adm. Richard E. Byrd. I hope you saw or will see it—"Secret Land." It had its premier on Navy Day, in 80 cities. The commercial movie makers used the official film taken by navy, marine corps, coast guard and army cameramen on the scene.

The picturing of disaster, of rescue, of tragedy, of suspense, of achievement, (in most cases the actual event as it happened) are something for which I have no comparison.

One purpose of the 1946 expedition which was a follow-up of Byrd's original 1929 undertaking when he established "Little America" and explored the great Antarctic ice cap, was to train the navy in polar operations.

Another aim was to make further discoveries and release the "unknown treasures" (which Byrd's earlier explorations indicated were there) for the benefit of mankind. Even the "routine" operations, the ships amidst the ice-floes, the landing on the ice-cap, the erection of the tent city and the operation of the planes, was an inspiring and thrilling sight, a tremendous tribute to the American skill in mechanical achievement, in personal endurance, bravery, ingenuity. It will make you proud to be an American.

Admiral Byrd didn't look much older than when we bid him Godspeed before he started on his first Antarctic venture. That was close to me for I was connected with the organization that syndicated the story for the press. But I was struck with the passage of time, and the years of study and research that have intervened, when I looked at Dr. Paul Siple, polar authority and geographer. (He was present in the flesh as well as on the screen.)

Paul Siple was chosen to go on the 1929 expedition after winning in a competition involving 600,000 Boy Scouts of America. Then he was a tall, slender lad of 20. Now he's stocky and graying. As a prominent geographer he has done important research for the war department.

The story of the Antarctic is studded with great names — Scott, Amundsen, Shackelton, to mention only three—as well as with sacrifice and tragedy. This picture of the "Secret Land," less secret now, shows the tremendous advances in technology made since the days of the early explorers.

It took thousands of years to shape the penguins' wings into the fins which make his survival in a polar land possible. In a few years in the laboratories and factories of America we have shaped the means which make survival and exploration possible in the same environment — exploration and discovery which some day may be of tremendous benefit to mankind.

The Russians last month kept scheduling Red air maneuvers over Berlin airlift corridors. Perhaps because of the overcrowded condition of the heavens over Moscow, Minsk, Pinsk, Baku, Tartu and Stalingrad?

Good Word for Franco

SENATORS Scott Lucas of Illinois and Bill Fulbright of Arkansas, both Democrats, gave newsmen the slip the other day and paid a private call at the state department. Their purpose was to put in a good word for Franco Spain.

Just back from a trip to Madrid, Lucas and Fulbright said they thought it was about time Spain was admitted back into the good graces of the western nations. They urged the state department to take the lead and review American policy toward Spain.

State department diplomats, however, cautioned against appeasing Franco at the risk of antagonizing the United Nations. It was by a U. N. vote that Spain became an international outcast, the senators were reminded.

Berlin Trouble

U. S. air force chiefs flatly deny it, but the Berlin airlift is expected to break down in November. Chief difficulty will be weather.

Other difficulties are the fact that planes are subject to terrific wear and tear, with little time for overhaul. Also, it's significant that Britain's RAF actually is carrying 45 per cent of all freight into Berlin. Anglo-American cooperation has been excellent, though the British aren't getting credit for their part of the job.

In November, simultaneous with murky weather, the airlift will be called upon to carry much more coal. Several million people in Berlin will be howling for it. The city already is on minimum rations. A deep-freeze unit in Berlin is worth nothing. Reason: electricity is turned off most of the day. Housewives can't begin cooking until 6 p. m.

Berlin's complete blackout to save coal has made the city a paradise for burglars. They are now so brazen they have been breaking into homes while occupants were still awake.

November bad weather also will coincide with probable political uncertainty in the U. S If Dewey wins, as seems certain, the American government will be in a state of flux between November and January. That is the time to watch for real trouble with the Russians.

U. S. Plot Against Peron?

Here is the exclusive inside story of the alleged "assassination plot" in Argentina:

John S. Griffiths, the American named as "chief instigator of the conspiracy," was cultural attache of the U. S. embassy in Buenos Aires under former Ambassador Spruille Braden. As such, he took an active part in Braden's campaign to aid the Argentine Democratic Union, which opposed the presidential candidacy of Juan D. Peron in 1945-46.

When Braden returned to Washington in September, 1945, Griffiths took over direction of this Democratic Union campaign. His activties, however, were consistently hindered by John Cabot, who remained as U. S. charge d'affaires, and who had never sympathized with Braden's methods. After Braden departed, Cabot refused to cooperate with Griffiths in any way, even denying him access to cables received from Washington.

Following Peron's election and the appointment of George S. Messersmith as ambassador to B. A., Griffiths resigned from the U. S. diplomatic service, but remained in the Argentine capital as technical adviser to several U. S. export firms.

Seven months ago, Griffiths was summarily expelled from Argentina, on the charge that he had fomented a strike of bank employees in Buenos Aires. Two bank-strike leaders, who had been fired from their jobs, submitted testimony that they had no connection or acquaintance with Griffiths. However, these statements were rejected by the court and never published in Argentina.

Griffiths returned to the U. S. last March, lined up three export representations from Uruguay, and departed for Montevideo in May. He has since been living there with his son, John Jr., 17, in a $25-a-month apartment, scantily furnished, making just enough money to get along.

On a strictly voluntary and unofficial basis, without pay, Griffiths has also served as confidential adviser to Ellis O. Briggs, U. S. ambassador to Uruguay, on various Argentine developments. Briggs is really the top man of the U. S. foreign service for the southern part of South America.

The "plot" announced in Buenos Aires named Griffiths as principal conspirator because he was the ideal goat. Although identified in the Argentine public mind with Braden, he is now out of public life and can be accused without automatically causing an international incident.

WANT TO DO something special with potatoes? Here's a company-mannered potato dish which can be served with a roast:

Broiled Potato Puff
(Serves 6)

8 or 9 medium potatoes, peeled
3 tablespoons butter
¾ to 1 cup scalded milk
2 teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
½ cup thick cream, whipped
⅔ cup grated American cheese

Cook potatoes until tender; drain and mash thoroughly. Add butter and gradually beat in milk. Beat until light and fluffy. Add salt and pepper and blend. Pile potatoes into a shallow casserole. Top with whipped cream and grated cheese. Slip into a slow to moderate (325 degree) oven for 10 to 12 minutes to heat through the potatoes and melt the cheese.

If Dad is away for dinner, you and the kiddies can make a meal out of the delectable dish:

Asparagus Mimosa
(Serves 6)

4 tablespoons butter
½ cup sliced mushrooms, if desired
½ cup chopped celery
4 tablespoons flour
1 tablespoon curry powder
2 cups milk
1 teaspoon salt
6 hard-cooked eggs
2 cups diced, cooked or canned asparagus

Melt butter in top of double boiler; add celery and mushrooms. Cook until vegetables are soft; blend in flour, add milk and cook until thickened. Add salt and curry powder. Mix with asparagus and hard-cooked eggs, and heat through. Serve, dusted with paprika.

Braised Red Cabbage
(Serves 6)

2 tablespoons bacon drippings
1 medium-sized head red cabbage
2 tablespoons vinegar
⅓ cup water
1½ teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
⅛ teaspoon cloves
3 tablespoons honey or corn syrup
3 tablespoons lemon juice

Slice red cabbage fine. Add half the cabbage to the drippings in a heavy sauce pan. Sprinkle with half the vinegar; add remaining cabbage and vinegar. Pour on water, cover and cook slowly until cabbage can be pierced with a fork. Season with salt, pepper and cloves. Add honey and lemon juice, mix thoroughly and serve hot.

Baked pears are a delicious dessert when baked in brown sugar and served chilled with cream and a sprinkling of nutmeg.

Did you know that you could layer sliced apples in a casserole, buttered, of course, with peanut brittle, butter and lemon juice and bake them all for a delicious dessert?

For kabobs that are delicious try sausage balls put on the same stick with apples and onions. Broil until well browned and thoroughly cooked.

LETTER TO ALADDIN

Dear Aladdin: Turn in your lamp. There's no use hanging onto the thing any more. Television makes anything you can do from now on smalltime stuff.

Nothing irritates me much more than the fellow who belittles video's appeal, takes a snooty attitude about it and insists he never bothers to look at it unless he is in a tavern. He belongs with the boys who denounced the telephone as lacking in popular appeal, and said that the movie was a flash in the pan. He probably didn't think the radio would ever get anywhere. I doubt if he welcomed the electric light.

If a football game played on a distant battlefield and recorded photographically via the air waves on a screen as far as one hundred miles away isn't miracle stuff I am a bum judge of wonderland happenings. If I am not having a fantastic experience when I fling myself into an easy chair in Magnolia Center, twist a dial and see every move in a football game, a vaudeville show or a prize fight in Bagdad on the Subway, then the guy who rode on the magic carpet was just the last man in a soapbox derby.

Yeah, I was a little late going for television. Like many others, I elevated my eyebrows and cracked "Who wants to see people on the radio? It's tough enough lissenin.'" A premature peek at the early model video sets was responsible in a way. I got scrambled pictures and my images came through the hamburg grinder. But not long ago I decided I could be wrong, which was quite an admission. To make a long story less boring, I got me a video set. And I am satisfied Aladdin, my boy, you can do no more, even if you get a bigger lamp and team up with Einstein, Aesop, Merlin, Caliostro and Circe

Sure there's "snow" in the picture now and then with occasional flickers. The images get the blind staggers at times. But would I squawk over minor details if I could go to the Rose Bowl without getting off a sofa? Would I complain of a slight annoyance if I could be at the world series, an epic football game and a Washington spy investigation without bothering to put on my shoes or socks?

Is it only a small wonder when a philharmonic orchestra, a Broadway show, six sporting events, a trip to South America, a visit to Miami, a polo match and a couple of golf tournaments can be transported directly into my living room between the Spanish table and the piano . . . and without any of the bother of getting tickets or catching trains?

Aladdin, my boy, you're through. There's no use trying to top your accomplishments. Turn in the lamp and relax with me. I need company. The wife is leaving me. She will sue television for alienation of affections. So she says. But she'll be back. Wait until video really goes in for fashion shows, Gable's latest releases, the divorce hearings and the gossip columnists in person.

Yours, Elmer.

Installment buying has been put under controls to stop inflation trends. It is now much harder to dig up what you haven't got in order to buy something you can't get.

DID you ever try looking back 34 years? We tried it. We rolled back the years.

The game we were thinking of took place on October 9, 1914. Dick Rudolph was facing Chief Bender, one of the great pitchers of all time. Rudolph was good—but he was no Chief Bender. But the underrated Boston began hammering Bender. And the smart, cool Rudolph tied up the hard-hitting Athletics. Rudolph beat Bender 7 to 1 in that opening game. This was a hard jolt to Athletic fans.

Not only that, but Hank Gowdy suddenly broke loose and began hitting like a combination of Dickey, Cochrane and Hartnett. As I recall it Gowdy hit 545 in that series. He took Connie Mack's crack pitchers in turn and flayed them.

HARTNETT

The Braves looked to be the best ball club you ever saw. I still recall the fine play of Johnny Evers and Rabbit Maranville at second and short. The overlooked Brave infield made the great Athletic infield look second rate.

That was a long spell back—1914. The Germans had been stopped at the Marne—but they were still close to Paris. The First World War was just getting up steam. I doubt that many of those playing in the 1948 series were even born at that far off date.

We had a great bunch of baseball writers—Ring Lardner, Hughey Fullerton, Damon Runyon, Boze Bulger, Charley Dryden, one of the greatest, Bunk MacBeth, on and on.

Rudolph was at his peak in this first game. He was the Johnny Sain of his time. He won 27 games that 1914 year, so you can compare him with Sain. He pitched and won two games in that 1914 series.

I saw Dick only a short while ago. He was a little bald, but he still looked in condition to pitch a few innings. I've known few brainier pitchers than Rudolph, few who had cooler nerves or control.

What has become of control? Doesn't the plate mean anything any more to 95 per cent of all pitchers?

Important Events of 1914

What else happened in 1914? Babe Ruth was just breaking in. The Babe was a rookie. Bobby Jones was only 12 years old. Ty Cobb was in his prime. Jack Dempsey was five years away from Willard and Toledo. Jack was a stringy kid of 19, weighing 165 pounds.

It was five years away from the start of sport's golden age. Man o' War hadn't been born. No one had ever heard of Red Grange, or Tilden, or Sande.

That year will be remembered as the start of World War I. But in baseball it is remembered as the year the miracle Braves accomplished the greatest feat baseball has ever known—the feat of beating the Mackmen four straight, and forcing Connie Mack to disband, by sale, the greatest ball club he has ever managed.

The Braves of 1914 were only a fair ball club. They were 90 per cent pitching and spirit.

Johnny Evers and Rabbit Maranville had greater fighting spirit on a ball field than any two men I've ever known—barring one—a fellow known as Ty Cobb. And I'll put Pepper Martin up with Cobb.

The only difference is that Cobb and Martin were physically equipped to handle the job while Evers and Maranville had to bank on spirit—head and heart.

Best Rookie of 1948

Richie Ashburn of the Phillies has been voted the best rookie of the year. There have been several complaints over this decision from other centers, including the Red Sox, who like their own Billy Goodman.

Whether or not he is the best rookie, I can tell you who is the most useful. His name is Alvan Dark of the Braves. Dark has done more for the Braves than any two rookies, have done for other clubs. Shortstop weakness hurt them badly a year ago.

This spring in Florida, Billy Southworth told a bunch of writers that Dark was the key man in his club. "I feel pretty sure he will make good. I know Eddie Stanky will help him a lot," Billy said. "Dark's an amazing all-around athlete."

I ran into Bernie Moore, Dark's old coach at L. S. U. Bernie is now the southeastern football commissioner.

"I don't think I have ever seen as fine an all-around star as Alvan Dark," Bernie said. "He was one of the best football players that ever came to L. S. U., and we've had our share, including Tittle of the Baltimore Colts.

Customs Officers Use Mirrors for Smuggler Search

NEW YORK.—Day and night, squads of armed men carrying flashlights and pocket mirrors swarm aboard ships entering New York harbor.

The alert, eagle eyed men of the United States customs enforcement division don't carry the glassware from milady's handbag to use in combing their hair or prettying their features. Pocket mirrors are standard equipment in the grim, unrelenting war on narcotic smuggling.

Placed strategically, a mirror shows up what may be ingeniously hidden behind a lavatory washbowl, a seaman's bunk, or in the machinery of the ship's intricate engine room.

Vigilance of these customs officers has paid off handsomely. In the last year they've confiscated contraband drugs valued at several million dollars in the illicit market, said Harry M. Durning, United States customs collector for the New York port.

N. Y. A "Hot" Port

New York, in law enforcement parlance, is a "hot" port—about the hottest in the world.

International smugglers have renewed efforts to penetrate port surveillance with narcotics for American dope peddling rings. History, said veteran port officials, is repeating itself. A postwar resurgence of narcotic smuggling is comparable to one after World War I.

Collector Durning attributes the alarming increase to a breakdown of prewar safeguards abroad, worldwide unrest and unsettled economic conditions and the age old desire for quick, high profits.

In tightening their vigil against smuggling, customs officers pay particular attention to all ships coming from French and Mediterranean ports. That's where, they said, most shipments of illicit drugs originate.

Ships from Britain and Ireland, the officers said, seldom figure in drug smuggling. Always suspect, however, said Herman Lipski, chief of the United States customs enforcement division, are vessels coming from Naples, Genoa, Marseille, Le Havre and Antwerp.

Seize Big Catch

Lipski's men recently scored their biggest catch of the year when they discovered narcotics valued at one million dollars secreted about a ship from Le Havre.

One bundle of drugs was found in the ship's galley at the bottom of a full barrel of flour. Another batch, encased in a waterproof bag, reposed in a soup tureen full of water. Other packages were discovered inside the lining of the ship's oven and in a box of sea biscuits.

Another recent haul came when shore patrol officers under Durning raided the basement of a dingy water front tenement. They found 36 ounces of narcotics and complete equipment for testing, diluting and preparing drugs for illicit sale to addicts.

In a drainpipe in the basement they found $18,000 in cash and a pistol. From a man caught fleeing the basement they confiscated four more ounces of drugs. Total value of the catch was placed at $200,000.

Captain Sews Up Wounds, Saves Sailor's Life at Sea

BOMBAY, INDIA—A merchantship captain whose hobby is watching surgeons at work performed an operation by flashlight and saved the life of a crew member who had been stabbed 12 times.

The four-hour operation was performed without an anesthetic on Karl Gilman, 36, of Plainfield, N. J. His alleged assailant, Delbert Ruben Irving, 23, Huntsville, Tex., was under arrest.

Gilman, third assistant engineer of the Flying Clipper, was operated on by Capt. H. K. Carlsen, 33, of Woodbridge, N. J. Gilman had two severed arteries, one in each arm, a deep gash in his throat and nine other knife wounds in the head and chest.

Carlsen applied tourniquets above the severed arteries. Then while a crew member held a flashlight, Carlsen began the delicate task of sewing the arteries together and closing the wounds, using a curved needle and surgical gut.

Four times Gilman fainted as the needle pierced his torn flesh. Each time Carlsen revived him with spirits of ammonia. It took 37 stitches to draw the cuts together. Then he dusted the wounds with sulpha and applied bandages.

CHECKING STORED GRAIN FOR INSECTS GOOD PLAN

Giving stored grain a check for insects now may increase the size of your check when you sell the grain later, says Harold Gunderson, extension entomologist at Iowa State College.

Any one of 15 different kinds of bugs may be damaging your grain right now, so it's best to inspect and see if any are present.

Gunderson suggests this check for bugs. Crawl over the surface of the grain and if it is crusty, bugs are present and working. Shove your arm down into the grain and bring up a handful. If you can see any bugs, or if the grain is warm, dusty and chewed up into flour, it is time to do something. However, to make sure, put a thermometer two feet below the surface in the center of the grain. If the temperature is above 70 degrees at that point, the grain needs treatment.

The safest treatment is 6 gallons of carbon tetrachloride per 1,000 bushels of grain. Also, a mixture of carbon tetrachloride and ethylene dichloride may be applied at the same rate. The mixtures are applied to the surface with a sprinkling can. The gases that are produced are heavier than air and sink into the grain, killing the bugs.

FALL PLOW GARDENS.

Hancock County gardeners will be ahead if they fall plow their gardens, Paul Henderson, county extension director said this week.

He pointed out that fall plowing makes possible earlier planting and helps control insects. Fall plowed gardens warm up and dry out quicker in the spring. Also fall plowing permits turning under fertilizer with organic matter such as manure.

Ed Cott, extension horticulturist at Iowa State College, says that a gardener should make arrangements to get a few loads of barnyard manure and spread it in the garden just before he plows. As soon as the manure is spread, apply 20 percent phosphate at the rate of 4 pounds for each 100 square feet of area. Then plow or spade the manure and fertilizer under.

If phosphate is not used, a4-12-4 or similar analysis commercial fertilizer should be used. Apply at the rate of three pounds for each 100 square feet of area. If 10-6-4 or similar analysis fertilizer is used, apply at the rate of 2 pounds for each 100 square feet of area.

Town gardeners who find it impossible to obtain barnyard manure can get needed organic matter or humus by making a compost pile. Leaves and other kinds of plant refuse makes good compost. Information can be found in almost any garden book or magazine on how a compost pile is made.

FOR MORE HOME COMFORT HAVE—

RUNNING WATER RIGHT AT HAND

Doing dishes seems a thankless job, yet homemakers who have the advantage of running water in their homes have found that even this task can be made easier.

This may be the year you'll be able to put a running water system in your house. If it is, you'll see some changes in your home. Even the folks who have running water on tap from a supply tank for household use may not realize just what extra conveniences there are in a pressurized system.

For one thing, you are going to save yourself time and work, that is, if you plan that water system to really work for you in the kitchen, in the laundry or workroom, and in the bathroom and shower. It's no joke to have to carry 25 tons of water a year just for the household use. Yet that's what an average family of five, without running water facilities in the home, carries each year. Wash days alone add at least 20 extra buckets to be carried.

New Booklet Helps

Realizing that many Iowa families are planning to install water systems in their homes as soon as possible, Naomi Shank, Extension Home Management Specialist of Iowa State College, has written a guide book to help do the best planning job possible. It's called "Running Water for Your Farm Home," and it's available free of charge from the agricultural extension office of your county or from the Bulletin Office at Iowa State College.

Having a ready supply of running water aids health and adds safety to home living, Miss Shank points out. For one thing, it is right there to help you check small fires before they get out of hand.

It's hard to know where to put the fixtures for running water unless you do some careful planning ahead of time. Miss Shank's first suggestion is to carefully plan for a complete system even though you may not get around to installing all the conveniences at once. Once you get the plumbing and fixtures in, it's difficult to change the set-up if it doesn't work out.

Planning involves four major questions. What kind of running water do you want? Where do you want it? Who will use it? How much will you need for everyday household use? And main factors to consider in answering each of these questions are discussed in the new booklet. The arrangement for each individual room—the kitchen, laundry, washroom and bathroom—becomes easier after all-over planning has been done, Miss Shank says.

Plenty of Water

Just make sure, Miss Shank reminds, that you plan for plenty of water for peak periods of use, as in canning and harvesting season. Also think ahead to the time when you may acquire more automatic equipment for your home such as a washer or clother washer.

Pure, safe water which can be both hard and soft, and cold is the ideal set-up for several reasons. Safe water, free of contamination, is a "must" for healthful living. Thus it's well to have a check made of the water before making extensive arrangements to have it piped into the house. It's also wise to check the mineral content of the water in order to know what size water softener you may need.

As for planning for hot water, you can use it for about 100 jobs around the house, whereas cold water is useful for about 10, Miss Shank adds. An automatic water heater is an important item in your plans for complete automatic water service.

Suggestions on how to draw a floor plan of your house to scale and how to make trial arrangements for the water system are given.

SEE MORE TURKEYS AT LOWER PRICE IN 1949

Folks setting a turkeyless Thanksgiving table this year because of the short crop have one consolation. Prospects are for an abundance of turkeys next year and lower prices for them.

United States Department of Agriculture economist expect that growers will raise more turkeys next year and that turkey prices will be down. They reason that record prices this fall, plus more feed at lower prices the rest of this growing season and during the 1949 hatching season, will induce farmers to increase turkey output. The economists expect more breeder hens on farms the first of Jan. in anticipation of the increased demand for poults during the 1949 hatching season.

With more turkeys next year, particularly during the heavy marketing season, the economists look for somewhat lower prices than in 1948. However, they point out that feed prices will continue low compared to turkey prices most of next year, making turkey raising profitable.

DON'T LET COWS FEED IN SPRAYED CORNFIELD

Play it safe and keep dairy cattle out of cornstalk fields that were sprayed earlier this year with DDT, chlordan or toxaphene. Earle Raun, extension entomologist at Iowa State College, made this warning statement to Iowa farmers this week.

These chemicals were used extensively in Iowa this year, DDT for corn borer control, and chlordan for grasshopper control.

Raun points out that dairy farmers shold follow this recommendation until further information can be compiled on the effects of the insecticides in the milk. It is believed that the chemicals can be secreted in milk. It is known that DDT, chlordan or toxaphene applied earlier in the season will not harm the livestock itself. However, no definite results have been obtained on the effects of the chemicals on human beings if secreted in milk.

Cream containing traces of these chemicals and sold to be made into butter may be a total loss. Butter shipped from one state to another is confiscated by the federal government if it shows traces of these insecticides.

Hay that was sprayed before it was cut also may carry the chemicals. Raun says it is advisable not to feed chemically treated hay to dairy cattle. Whether it is harmful or not depends upon the stage of growth the hay was in when the chemicals were applied. Hay that was just shooting through the ground when sprayed has lost all harmful qualities by the time it is ready to feed.

Beef cattle or other non-milking cows may be turned into treated stalk fields or safely fed hay that was treated before it was cut. There has been no evidence to show that the chemicals are injurious to the animals, according to Raun.

BOX-ELDER BUG CAN BE CONTROLLED BY SPRAYS

The biggest crop of box-elder bugs since 1940 is looking for a place to spend the winter.

First thing to do about the box-elder bug problem is to spray outside concentrations of the bugs wih kerosene, crankcase oil, fly spray or 2 percent chlordan, according to Iowa State College entomologists.

If bugs get inside of houses in spite of efforts to prevent them, 2 percent chlordan, applied as residual spray around windows and other places through which they enter, will control box-elder bugs for an indefinite length of time.

HI-SCHOOL HI-LIGHTS

Congradulations to the Juniors for their fine work with their class play. I think everyone will agree that they had, by all means, the largest crowd ever present at a class play. Their total, for the ticket sales, was the grand sum of $302.10. Information, just for you people who are wondering. The girls won the ticket selling race and now it's up to the boys to furnish them a party.

"Use of Liquid Air," by Dr. Brown of Chicago Tech, College. really held everyone's interest in an assembly program Tuesday morning. We found that liquid air it is so cold it will even freeze mercury, which was one of the many things it did to amaze us.

To create an interest in school now, everyone is selling magazines. We are doing this to help the Student Council get some financial backing. Buying curtains for the gym so movies can be shown is one of the many things their money will be used for during the year. So if any high school students come selling magazines you will know it is for a worthy cause. Buy a magazine subscription from them annd give the Student Council a boost.

SENIOR INTERVIEW

Raymond Christians, our class nuisance, is our subject for interview this week. He is 18 years old and was born at Klemme, March 29, 1930. His favorite song is, "Let's Be Sweethearts Again." His steady girlfriend is his hobby and dancing is his pastime. The sport he likes best is basketball. If he has enough ambition he plans to be a farmer. We all wonder if he'll ever have that much ambition. His pet peeve is a freshman girl and we wonder why. Oddly enough his favorite subject is government.

GOSSIP!!

Why is it that I. S. always sits by the boys in study hall??

What's the matter I. G. don't the grades have news anymore?

I see that M. L. A. was having a lot of fun in Home Ec. class the other day.

M. L. weren't you jealous that your old flame took another girl home from the dance Tuesday night?

D. R., how did you like the show that you saw with N. S.??

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

"Husbands, Wives, and Marriage"

Maybe you read that survey published recently in a national magazine, entitled "Husbands, Wives and Marriage."

It showed that among happily married couples, those who criticized themselves outnumbered those who criticized the other person. Among unhappily married couples, it was just the opposite — each one tended to criticize the other.

That's the way it is in our town, as I guess it is in yours. Criticism, whether it's of a wife's taste for hats, or a husband's taste for pipe tobacco and an evening glass of beer or ale, is a sure start towards unhappiness.

As for what made happy marriages, companionship within the home was listed most important of all. And from where I sit, a husband and wife who can spend an evening by the fire—with nothing more exciting than a mellow glass of beer, and a friendly conversation—are a truly well-matched couple.

Joe Marsh

FARM BUREAU OFFICIAL TO BE IN DES MOINES

Mr. C. A. Bird, who is the Farm Bureau voting delegate from this county, will be in Des Moines on November 15, 16, 17, and 18, where he will represent the county organization at the annual meeting of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation.

Mr. Bird will meet with voting delegates from the other 99 county Farm Bureaus in the state, to work out and adopt the official Farm Bureau program for next year.

Policies of the state organization concerning the matter of taxes, schools, roads, weed laws, as well as the Farm Bureau-Extension relationship, are expected to be determined at the meeting.

The resolutions of the Farm Bureau in this county, which were adopted at the annual meeting on October 21st recommend 100 percent collection of the Iowa income tax.

Also they recommend that more money from the state treasury be used to finance schools, as a means of relieving property taxes for school purposes.

Mr. Bird will be expected to vote on all matters up at the State meeting, in accordance with the recommendations of the members in this county.

However, when the program of the Iowa Farm Bureau is officially adopted, this county will support it, regardless of whether the local recommendations were in agreement or not.

PIGS THAT SLEEP IN A HOUSE HAVE LESS FLU

Good management is the most effective means of preventing an outbreak of flu in hogs, Dr. K. W. Stouder, extension veterinarian at Iowa State College, said this week as he remided farmers that hog flu is most prevalent in the fall.

He points out that pigs running in cornfields often sleep outside even though a comfortable shelter is provided. When they do, a chilly wind or a cold rain will likely be followed by an outbreak of flu. Pigs kept in a healthy growing condition and required to sleep in a house that is clean, dry and free from drafts stand the bests chance of escaping the disease, Stouder says.

The onset of hog flu is characterized by a loss of appetite, rapid loss of flesh, high temperature and a persistent cough.

Loss of weight makes hog flu an economic problem. It also interferes with the breeding herd. Sows and gilts affected by flu may fail to settle or may produce small and weak litters.

There is no vaccination agaaist the disease. About the only treatment is internal medication Stouder says. Sick hogs should be provided with comfortable house, free from drafts, and should be given a slightly laxitive diet. Oilmeal added to a light slop will provide the laxitive. Guiacol may be given in the drinking water to act as an internal medication.

An inexperienced person might easily confuse hog flu wih hog cholera in the early stages, Stouder points out. Whenever the diagnosis is questionable, a veterinarian should be called.

MAKE YOUR ROOMS CHEERFUL FOR— WINTER EVENINGS AT HOME

Ever envy another homemaker because her home looks so pretty? Just take a tip from home furnishings authorities—it's what you do with what you have that counts—not the money you spend. Cleverness in color and arrangement do the trick.

Now, before the family settles down in the household for the winter, let's give our rooms the onceover.

Are they just as attractive as we can make them—that is without dipping into the family pocketbook too much? Are they arranged so the family can really enjoy a comfortable evening together after the farm work and school work are over? What can be done to make them more livable?

If your family has a tendency to gravitate to the dining room table for an evening's session of studying or reading, perhaps your living room needs a refreshing bit of color or a better arrangement. Perhaps what it really needs is better lighting.

It's the rare room that needs to have a lot of money spent on it to make it cheerful and comfortable, says Nora Workman, extension home furnishings specialist, Iowa State College. She has seen home-makers fix up their rooms for "little or nothing" just by trying out some clever ideas.

New Ideas

One family, for example, has reupholstered old automobile seats creating lovely sectional furniture just right for their home. The cost was very small. Other families have made desks, magazine racks and book cases and even spruced up old furniture from the attic to make their homes more attractive.

The logical place to start is, with what you have, Miss Workman says. While this may seem like an obvious suggestion, the fact remains that many folks think new furnishings will solve their problem. Usually, they can take their familiar household belongings and make them do as well.

If you haven't done housecleaning yet, or even if you have, play "fruit basket upset" with your furniture some evening, she says. Get the whole family in on the fun. Pull all the furniture out into the center of the room. Then try each piece of furniture in various positions and see where it will best serve.

Here are some points to keep in mind as you tackle each piece of furniture: Is it in the place where it can offer the most use and convenience? Is there light enough near it? Does it help balance the other furniture in the room so that the room does not look lopsided from too much furniture on one side and not enough on the other? Are the colors and the design in each piece of furniture in keeping with the other furnishings?

Paralell To Wall

Large pieces of furniture belong back against the wall. This is true of the davenport, piano and book shelves. Smaller pieces of furniture may be placed at an angle, with some moved farther out than others to break otherwise regular lines and make the room more interesting.

Just make sure that all the pieces of furniture which will be used together are close to each other. Place a comfortable chair, table, magazine and book rack, and lamp near each other for a reading unit. Or group the writing desk, lamp and chair together so that they form convenient study unit.

For a final test, just make sure that all arrangements provide easy conversation within the room.

She says it's all in getting a new viewpoint on the family living room, and that there's no reason why it can't look much like the interesting ones in magazines.

Dr. and Mrs. Anderson and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Coobs spent Sunday afternoon and evening at the P. W. Johnson home in Dakota City.

The Klemme School Board entertained the faculty to a 7:00 o'clock dinner at the Vets Club at Clear Lake on Wednesday evening.

The Little Cattle Feeders

The Little Cattle Feeders of Grimes Township meet at the home of Lois and Merlyn Helps with all members present and three new members joined. The new officers elected were President Galen Gruis, Vice President Merlyn Helps, Sec.-Treas. Doris Gruis and Reporter Lois Helps. Mr. Olsen gave us a talk on our project for the coming year and our leader Gene Jamnsen handed our old record books back and the new material for the coming year. Our next meeting will be held at the home of Dick Gilpen.

COLLISION

Driving along the highway one night recently, Mrs. Albert Lickteig of Wesley ran smack into a big Angus bull near Titonka. The front of the car was badly damaged in the head-on collision; the bull was uninjured.

TANKAGE AND MINERALIZED FEED FOR SALE AT OUR PLANT

Yes... Reddy and Goldilocks have something in common... but to Reddy it's no fairy tale!

During every wakeful hour, Reddy is haunted by rising costs, greater demands — and inflation. All three become bigger threats every day.

Each time Reddy buys equipment or supplies, he finds prices higher. Labor and taxes are costing more. And everyone is using more electricity.

So far, greater power demands make it possible to produce electricity more economically. Up to now it hasn't been necessary to raise prices. But as demand further increases, Reddy reaches his limit of capacity. That means more equipment to buy at today's inflated prices.

Just how to meet these growing demands is a problem. Reddy doesn't know the answer right now. But he's working on it. He hopes to be able to continue serving you at today's low electric rates.

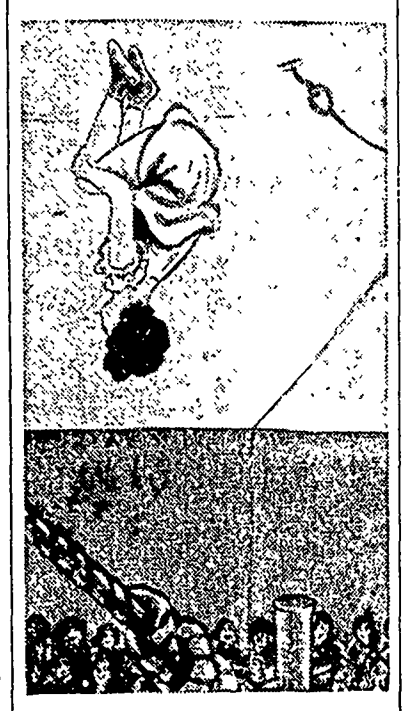
In the early part of the season, Tony began to formulate a plan whereby he might show Annette how he felt for her. During the hours when he was not exhibiting his puppets, Tony carved furiously, creating new properties, scenery, and characters.

The triumph of this frenzied activity was a beautiful doll—the very image of Annette. Soon the trappings were completed. It was



The leading lady of the big top hurtled out and up toward the roof.

Tony's plan to assemble the miniature circus on a Sunday when the show would be laying over. He had planned how he would invite Annette to see his new act!

"What if she won't come?" he thought. But surely she would not refuse this simple request. The thoughts raced through his mind as he watched the object of his affection leave the tent.

Slowly he arose from the grass. He would wait until she had changed her costume Then he would go to the mess tent. He knew the exact moment when she would enter for her evening meal. After an interval that seemed literally hours to Tony, Annette came into the dining tent. Shyly he approached her,

"EXCOOS, please, Signorina Annette . . ."

"Oh, M'sieur Fragiotto," trilled Annette, "and how are you today?" Tony was pleasantly surprised that the circus queen knew who he was.

"If the lady has the little minute," he stammered, "I—Antonio—have created the new poppets. They are the pairformairs of circus," he mouthed the words carefully in his broken English. "I would like, please, the advice of the Signorina about them!"

"How very charming," laughed Annette with a toss of her dark hair, and a merry twinkle of the sparkling, blue eyes. "I would be delighted, M'sieur Fragiotto. Perhaps you could show them to me tomorrow when we have no performance?"

"That is what I was theenking," said Tony. "I will have them assamble in the side show tent after dinner tomorrow."

"Fine," replied Annette. "I have often watched your charming show. I would be delighted M'sieur Fragiotto. Perhaps you would be so kind as to show me how to make them work?" This was even more than Tony had dreamed might be possible.

"Indeed! Indeed!" he shouted enthusiastically. "I shall expect you then tomorrow."

The next afternoon, Tony was ready with the puppets long before the dinner hour. He talked to them affectionately as he put them through their paces. To Beppo, the clown, he chuckled:

"And now, leetle fonny man, you make the boys and gurls to laugh, no?" The beautifully carved wooden horses pranced and danced as gracefully as their real counterparts in the big tent across the way. But the truly artistic masterpiece was the replica of Annette. Tenderly, he placed the tiny puppet into place on the aerial swing in his miniature arena.

"My beautiful one," he almost whispered, "we shall see if you can do the triple soubresaut, reesking your lovely life!" As the graceful puppet tumbled through space at the behest of Tony's nimble fingers, he became entranced in his work. He did not see Annette slip into the tent. He was startled when she exclaimed,

"But . . . it is perfect!" She scampered behind the scenes to examine the trappings of the new show. She oh-ed and ah-ed at the beautifully wrought details of the tiny circus, and when Tony handed her the tiny duplicate of herself, she was utterly speechless. Finally she said:

"Oh, Tony, it's beautiful . . . too beautiful. I don't really look like that, do I?" she queried, looking coquetishly up into his eyes. The blood rushed to Tony's face, and he stammered weakly:

"Oh, Tony, show me how to make her work," pleaded Annette, dancing up and down excitedly like a child with a new toy. "Can you really make her do a triple somersault like myself?"

"Yes," laughed Tony, "but it is not easy. You must practice. Now see," he said, placing the toggle sticks in her hands as she clambered onto the platform beside him. "When you move thees one so, the arms and legs do your beeding When you move thees one so," he indicated the other stick, "the head and body move at your command."

Annette moved the sticks awkwardly, and the little doll gyrated wildly in her hands. In her effort to disentangle the puppet, she became involved in the strings. Tony reached around her shoulders to straighten up the entanglement, when she raised her face, brushing his chin with her soft hair. Her lovely feminine fragrance held Tony entranced, and acting impulsively, he kissed her upturned lips.

"Plees, forgeev me, I . . . I . . ." he stammered. But Annette was not angry. Rather she seemed pleased. Ever so tenderly, she cuddled against Tony, and speaking softly, she said:

"But, Tony, little Annette is still all tangled up. She will surely never make the somersault if you do not help me."

Tony's heart was making the somersaults now, as once again he put his arms about her. Then the words came pouring forth . . . the words he had whispered to the puppet Annette.

"Oh, my beautiful Annette," he sighed, "these long months I have loved you. I never dreamed . . ." but his words were lost, for Annette's lovely face was lifted to his, and her warmth and beauty engulfed him as he kissed her long and tenderly.

And Annette—the doll—somersaulted again and again at the end of her tangled strings.

"This Same Jesus"

Grace Noll Crowell

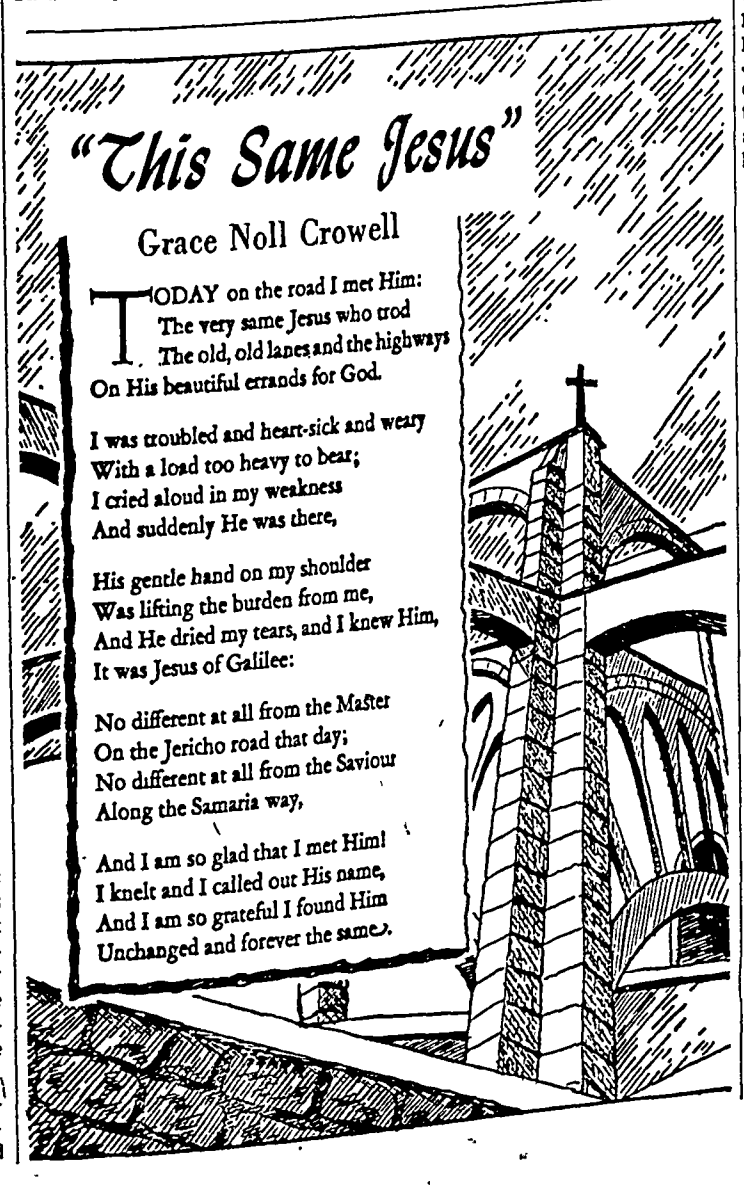
TODAY on the road I met Him:
The very same Jesus who trod
The old, old lanes and the highways
On His beautiful errands for God.

I was troubled and heart-sick and weary
With a load too heavy to bear;
I cried aloud in my weakness
And suddenly He was there,

His gentle hand on my shoulder
Was lifting the burden from me,
And He dried my tears, and I knew Him,
It was Jesus of Galilee:

No different at all from the Master
On the Jericho road that day;
No different at all from the Saviour
Along the Samaria way,

And I am so glad that I met Him!
I knelt and I called out His name,
And I am so grateful I found Him
Unchanged and forever the same.



THE BIBLE SPEAKS

International Uniform Sunday School Lessons

By DR. KENNETH J. FOREMAN

SCRIPTURE The Book of Job.
DEVOTIONAL READING: Job 23 3-10.

Drama in the Bible

Lesson for November 7, 1948

THOMAS CARLYLE, a crusty dyspeptic but a literary artist of no small skill, was visiting a Christian friend. In the morning at family prayers (so the story goes) his host put into his hands a copy of the Bible and asked him to read a chapter. Carlyle opened at the first chapter of Job; read it—read on to the next and the next and the next — and refused to stop reading till he had finished all 42 chapters.

Dr. Foreman

Job is like that. It is a book you hate to put down In all the Bible it is the outstanding example of the drama; a drama of conflict in which the opposing forces are not people as much as ideas.

The Characters

THE characters at first are three. God, Satan and a man named Job. Job is a good man, in fact God calls him perfect. He is also prosperous, and thereby hangs the tale For one fateful day God and Satan have a conversation about this man. The Lord inquires if Satan has seen him, and how good he is. Oh yes, Satan says airily, he has seen him, but he does not think highly of his "goodness" He is too well paid for it. He has a large and happy family, and has immense wealth; why shouldn't he be good? Take away his prosperty and he will curse you to your face, Satan sneers.

So God lets Satan work his malice on the man. In a terrible series of disasters, one rushing on another's heels, everything Job has owned vanishes. His children are killed by storm and fire, and Job is left a childless, penniless man. But Job will not complain; his faith in God still does not waver.

So when next Satan reports to God, the Almighty asks again: Did you see my servant Job? He holds fast to his integrity Ah, yes, sneers the unbelieving fiend Yes, but he still has his health. He can have another family, another fortune. Make life itself so miserable that he will long to die, and then you will see his goodness vanish, then he surely will curse you to your face

So God let Satan do his worst—Do all you can to him, God says, only leave him alive. And then Job is made horribly and painfully ill, he cannot sleep for the torture of boils covering him from head to foot. Three of his friends come to visit him. For seven days they sit in silence, and then begins a great debate, with Job on one side and his friends on the other: Why must such things be? Why must good people suffer?

Was Job Real?

DON'T ask· Was Job a real character, or a made-up one like Hamlet and Macbeth? It is very likely there was once upon a time some man by that name who suffered in that way, and that he had friends, not too sympathetic, who talked it over with him.

As Hamlet and Macbeth were historical characters, whom Shakespeare used with high art to express profound ideas, so the author of Job may well have used the trials of some man he knew, or knew of, to express truths about a problem as profound and widespread as the human race.

For Job most surely is real: his local name may be Smith or Jones, and he may be living just around the corner from you. Indeed, sooner or later every man's name is Job. Sooner or later, every thoughtful person has to face the tragedy of human suffering: Why must such things be?

Suffering Is Test

THERE is, however, one solution which comes out in the course of the drama. It is not a theoretical solution; that is, it does not altogether answer the question, WHY must men suffer? It does tell us WHAT we can do about it.

Suffering is a test: A test of man's faith and real goodness. "When he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold," Job says. (23:10.) The test of a ship is not the quiet waters of the harbor but the roaring open sea; the test of a man is not comfort but stress and pain.

To have faith in God only when we are well-fed and softly cushioned is not faith at its best. Faith and goodness prove their reality only when they hold together even when torn by the nails of a cross.

Fifty-Fifty Class Met At The Dale Brede Home Friday Evening

The 50-50 Sunday School class met Friday evening, November 5 at the Dale Brede home with a good attendance.

Mrs. Roy Arnold was in charge of the lesson after which a business meeting was held. The class voted to send a Christmas box to Holland with Mrs. Carl Finders and Mrs. Clifford Montgomery in charge of buying and packing the gifts. Also any used clothing will be mailed.

Judy and Delwyn Brede favored the group with several musical numbers.

The next meeting will be a Christmas party held at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Egeland on Sunday evening, Dec. 12th with a gift exchange.

At the close of the evening Mrs. Brede served a delicious lunch.

EDWARD BARZ IS THE NEW PRESIDENT OF TRI COUTY FEDERATION

At a Youth Rally held at the Evangelical and Reformed Church Sunday afternoon, Edward Barz was elected as President of the Tri County Youth Federation.

One Hundred and three people were in attendance from congregations of Geneva, Manly, Ackley, Hubbard, Alden, Hampton and Klemme. Rev. Robert Jacobs of Manly spoke to the group and Miss Charlotte Klein gave a report of the Youth Conference held in Michigan this past summer. Moving pictures of the local Bible School and colored slides were shown in the basement of the church. The Klemme young people served a lunch at 5:30.

TREAT UNLOADED GUN AS THOUGH IT WERE LOADED

"Watch that muzzle"! makes a good byword when the crisp fall air calls for bringing out the gun and heading for the fields and woods to hunt.

Always unload a gun and then treat it as though it were loaded, is a cardinal rule for safe hunting, says Norval Wardle, safety specialist at Iowa State College.

He points out other rules that are designed to bring the hunter back alive. Never point a gun at anything you don't want to shoot, and be sure of your target before you pull the trigger, he warns.

Don't climb a tree or fence with a loaded gun, and always carry your gun so that you can control the direction of the muzzle, even if you stumble. Best fence climbing procedure is to "break" the gun and hand it to your partner, while you climb the fence, Wardle says.

Other measures the safety specialist recommends include checking to be sure the barrel and action are free of obstructions, and then making sure you never leave your gun unattended unless you unload it first.

Wardle reminds farmers that hunting and harvesting are two separate jobs that are hard to mix if minimum safety precautions are to be observed. He cites accidents that occurred last year and again this fall when farmers carried guns on tractors and corn pickers. Besides, it is against Iowa law to carry a loaded gun in or on a moving vehicle, he points out. Guns must be broken apart, when being transported by vehicle.

ALMOST ANY ROUGHAGE CAN BE FED TO CATTLE

Almost any sort of roughage sufficiently palatable so that cattle will eat it can be used in feeding provided it is properly supplemented, says Rex Beresford, extension animal husbandman at Iowa State College.

The better the quality of the roughage the easier it is to do a good job of feeding, and the less the need for expensive supplements.

Beresford points out that the Illinois Experiment Station gives the following estimate of comparative values of common farm roughages for feeding fattening cattle. Compared to alfalfa hay that was valued at $20 per ton, red clover was valued at $18, soybean hay at $16, lespedeza hay $15, corn fodder $15, corn silage $7 and oat straw $5 per ton.

Brome-alfalfa or clover-timothy mixtures are worth about 15 to 20 percent less than the straight legume says, Beresford says.

Legume or grass-legume mixtures in silage make a somewhat different feed than corn or silage. The mixtures are higher in protein and lower in energy value. This will replace hay rather than both hay and some corn, according to Beresford. To get the same gain by feeding grass—legume mixtures, more grain must be fed but a smaller amount of protein supplement is required than with corn silage.

The cartoene content is so high in grass silage that cattle may show the typical grass colored carcasses when killed unless taken off the silage 6 weeks before slaughter, Beresford points out.

Visited With Mrs. A. R. White And Son In Colorado

On their trip west Editor and Mrs. R. A. Jorgenson noticed a cafe at Bennett, Colorado that read "White's Kitchen." They drove up and found that Mrs. A. R. White and son, Albert, former Klemme residents were the proprietors. The Whites are located on highway 40 about 30 miles east of Denver. They run a cafe and tourist camp, and are doing a nice business. They send regards to their many Klemme and Goodell friends.

GEORGE BORN DIED SATURDAY

GEO. BORN, 88, DIED SATURDAY EVE FOLLOWING LONG ILLNESS

Funeral Services Held This Afternoon From Evangelical And Reformed Church

Mr. George Born, 88, died at his home in Klemme at 9:45 Saturday evening following an illness of a couple of years duration. Mr. and Mrs. Born have been residents of Klemme since 1920.

Funeral services will be held at the Klemme Evangelical and Reformed Church this Wednesday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock with the Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch officiating. Interment at the Ell township cemetery near Klemme.

Obituary

George Born was born on the 16th of June 1860 at Ratzwitz, Pommern, Germany. He and his twin sister were baptized and later confirmed in the Lutheran Church of Ratzwitz. In the year 1873, soon after their confirmation they came to America to make their home with an aunt at Manitowia, Wisconsin. He then found employment in Milwaukee, first as a blacksmith and later as a carpenter.

In the year 1885 he was united in marriage to Minnie Priebe. Three children were born to this union. All of them are living in our community. They are; Clara, Mrs. Henry Barz; Alma, Mrs. Fred Nuehring; and Irma, Mrs. George Thieman. The mother died in 1896.

On the 15th of March 1898 Mr. Born was united in marriage to Miss Mathilda Post. In 1920 Mr. Born retired and they moved to Klemme. On the 15th of March of this year they celebrated their 50th Anniversary. Mr. Born was an industrious and thrifty man. He faithfully attended services at the Evangelical and Reformed Church of which he was a member.

He died Saturday evening at 9:45, November 6th, 1948, at the age of 88 years, 4 months, and 22 days.

Surviving him and mourning his death are his widow, Mrs. Mathilda Born, his three daughters, 10 grand children and 12 great grand children.

Handkerchief Shower

A surprise handkerchief shower was given in honor of Mrs. Howard Baack's birthday at her home Wednesday afternoon. Bingo was played for entertainment and a delicious lunch was served by the self-invited ladies.

He looks like a speckled trout but feels lower down than a snake! The doctor gives him 999 chances out of a 1000 to recover.

EDITOR AND MRS. R. A. JORGENSON SR. BACK FROM WESTERN TRIP

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Jorgenson, Sr. returned home last Wednesday afternoon from a 6,100 mile trip through the west, southwest and south.

Leaving Klemme they accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Chapman of Kansas City, with Los Angeles as the destination where the ladies have a sister and two brothers, and where Mr. Chapman's mother, a brother and a sister live.

The route taken was through Kansas to Denver, then Salt Lake City, Utah; Reno and Carson City, Nevada to Sacramento and San Francisco, California. A visit to the Yosemite National Park, famous for the great Redwood Forest, and then to Los Angeles where the party spent over a week visiting with relatives and seeing points of interest around there.

The trip homeward included a trip to Boulder Dam, world's largest engineering feat and on to the Grand Canyon, so vast and beautiful that it cannot be pictured or described. The next tour of interest along the way was the Petrified Forest and Painted Desert in Arizona.

New Mexico was crossed through the north central part, on the highway running through Gallup; Albuquerque and Clovis, then down to Amherst, Texas, for a visit with the Vaughters and on north to Amarillo, Texas, across the Oklahoma panhandle and through Kansas and on home.

There were many interesting things along the route and the Editor expects to have a few stories that may be of general interest and will be published from time to time.

A brief mention of some of the highlights would include going over the Continental Divide at Berthold Pass, the highest highway in the Rockies near Denver. The peaks there rise over 12,000 feet, but the highway was excellent and the scenery marvelous on this road. Snow covered the mountain peaks and far down into the valley and the party stopped to throw snowballs.

Salt Lake City, in the midst of a desert in a beautiful city and the party visited the Mormon section of the city, famous for the beautiful temple, the tabernacle, the old church and the museum and historical building This will be told about in a later story.

A half day was spent at Reno, Nevada, another very nice city with a bad reputation for its divorce mill and gambling places. However, gambling is under state supervision at all times as the state government practically lives on revenue from gambling of all kinds. We also visited the great gambling places at Las Vegas, some of the largest in the world. They are run on a high scale and there is no drunkedness or foul language in any of them. That was really surprising to us. However, we would not like to have the State of Iowa get its tax support in that manner. It seemed there were about as many women as men at the roulette wheels, dice tables, poker tables, race charts, and what have you. The percentage is in favor of the "house" in all gambling places and the customer usually loses.

San Francisco was an interesting place to visit where the chief attraction is the Oakland Bridge, perhaps the largest and most beautiful bridge in the world. The Golden Gate bridge is also a massive piece of engineering and rates among the great engineering feats of the world. The trip through China Town was not too impressive. China Town was entered from the waterfront, the tough part of the city and lower China Town was certainly a filthy dump but approaching Market Street, the main thoroughfare in San Francisco, China Town really had some very nice shops and cafes.

Driving southeast from San Francisco we came into the Yosemite National Park where we saw the oldest living things on earth, the great Redwoods. There would probably be enough lumber in just one of those trees to build every house in Klemme and have a lot left over. Some of the trees are over 25 feet in diameter and tower skyward 200 feet.

Los Angeles was the next destination which we reaohed in due time coming through the Imperial Valley, a rich agricultural and fruit growing region where we saw vast fields of cotton, orange and lemon groves, vineyards, pecan, almond and walnut groves, alfalfa fields and vast fields of vegetables. Nearly all of this section is irrigated, but there is also some "dry" farming done.

Over a week was spent in Los Angeles visiting with relatives, seeing the many places of interest thereabouts, taking in radio broadcasts and seeing the noted "bright spots" and famous cafe at night.

The big thing, however; we did not realize that there was so much worthless, waste land and desert in the United States until we made this trip. Millions and millions of acres of land worth not a single dime and we wonder how some people can make a living away out in nowhere! We concluded North Iowa really has something. It is the richest and best in the U. S. and we are glad to be back in God's country again.

During the next few issues the Editor will have a story on the Mormon Temple at Salt Lake; the gambling houses at Reno and Las Vegas; the oldest Mission in California; Knott's Berry Farm near L. A.; Boulder Dam; Grand Canyon; the Great Majave Desert; Trading Post and New Mexico Indians and perhaps other items that may be of general interest to our readers.

ANNUAL BAZAAR WILL FEATURE FIVE BOOTHS AT CHURCH

Don't Kill The Goose That Lays The GOLDEN EGGS

The pheasant population in Iowa and the middlewest generally has definitely increased over that of last year.

Biologists of the State Conservation Commission are convinced that even with present day hunting pressure the future of pheasant hunting in this state is not jeopardized as long as cocks only are killed during the hunting season and that the upward trend can continue.

Pheasants are polygamous, and one cock normally has a harem of two or more hens. Experiments have shown that in the wild a ratio of one cock to as many as ten hens is sufficient to guarantee egg fertility.

When sex ratios are nearly even, as they are at the present time, an excess of cocks exists and these may and should be harvested.

If hunters do not shoot hens, reproduction next year will be the same as if the cocks were not harvested. Every Iowa hunter who is interested in the future of the pheasant hunting sport will assist in the perpetuation of pheasant hunting by observing the "Kill No Hens" law.

Iowa Honey Production Is Lowest In Ten Years

Iowa's honey production of 7,380,000 pounds this year is the lowest in 10 years, according to Floyd Paddock, extension apiarist at Iowa State College.

Paddock says that low yield is the primary cause, averaging 30 pounds per colony. The lowest yield of the past decade was 47 pounds per colony in 1943. High yield for the period was 114 pounds in 1941. Last year producers realized 96 pounds of honey per colony.

Cause of the low yield was the winter kill of Iowa's legume crops coupled with dry weather last spring.

Colder Weather In Iowa

South Dakota had 16 inches of snow and a blizzard last week but Iowa escaped with rain and colder weather. A few flakes of snow fell here Sunday as the thermometer was near the freezing mark. The rain delayed picking corn, however, most of the corn has now been picked and cribbed and is the largest yield in history.

Finish Drainage Ditch Contract

Drainage Engineer William Henschen reports that Sylvan C. Oleson, Forest City drainage contractor, has completed his contract for the cleaning of the main open ditch in Hancock County drainage district No. 65 A hearing will be held on the report by Hancock County Supervisors on Monday, November 15, at 10 a. m. The contract totaled $3,617.65.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. N. Says Cease Fire in Palestine; Truman Asks More Defense Funds; U. S. Atom Control Plan Approved

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

CEASE FIRE:
Holy Land

Almost before anyone knew what was happening fierce fighting between Israeli and Egyptian forces had flared into bloom in the Negev, southern Palestine desert area.

ISRAELI government spokesmen said the purpose of the Israeli attack was to smash open the road to Jewish settlements in the Negev. Blocked transportation lines had prevented the Jews from running supply convoys to isolated settlements in the district.

But Dr. Ralph Bunche, acting Palestine mediator for the U. N., in his report to the security council, told a different story. Blame for the eruption of fighting in the Negev, he said, was not a "question of black and white."

"EACH side has soiled its hands in the grim business of trying to win a war through the instrumentality of a forced truce," was his version of the conflict.

By the time the battle had proceeded savagely for six days the harassed U. N. security council had had enough. It commanded both Arabs and Jews to issue immediate cease fire orders.

Earlier, Bunche had attempted to promote a three-day truce in the fighting, with each side holding the positions it then was occupying. The effort fell through, however, when Israel rejected the proposal.

EVEN as the security council acted the fighting was spreading from the Negev to other fronts in the Holy Land—along the Jerusalem-Tel Aviv highway, where Trans-Jordan forces were grouped, and northeast of Tel Aviv in areas held by other Arab forces.

Results of the security council order, at the outset, at least, were disappointing. Each side tried to shift the blame to the other, neither appeared willing to hold the battle.

Palestine truce observers informed the United Nations that the Israeli forces generally appeared to be the attackers in the new fighting that had developed outside the southern front in the Negev.

CONTROL PLAN:
For Atoms

How to establish effective, workable control of atomic energy on an international scale is one of the rocks upon which the U. N. has almost foundered more than once, but the situation began to look a shade or two brighter when the United Nations suddenly steeled its resistance to almost impossible Russian demands on the issue.

OVER the objections of the Soviet bloc, the U. N. political committee overwhelmingly endorsed the western plan for atomic control as a necessary basis for eventual elimination of atomic weapons.

The conflict which has kept the atomic control problem deadlocked for so long is simply this:

The U. S. and the West insist that an air-tight system of international control and inspection must be established before the U. S. would feel safe in destroying its atomic weapons.

The resolution which the political committee adopted is generally in line with the American policy. The plenary session of the general assembly was expected to give it a routine final approval.

Peculiarly enough, this was the first time since Bernard Baruch presented the American plan to the atomic energy commisison in June, 1946, that all of the United Nations had a chance to vote on it. Previously atomic energy was discussed only in the security council and the atomic energy commission.

SHORTLY prior to the U. N. action the U. S. had demanded that the world group turn the deadlocked problem over to the five great powers and Canada for direct negotiations.

At that time Warren R. Austin, chief U. S. delegate, had told the 58-nation political committee that the U.N. could go no further in its efforts to control the atom until the Soviet union agreed to "participate in the world community on a cooperative basis."

HOW much good the U.N. vote of approval would do as long as the Russians continued to object was a question that remained hanging fire.

It was conceded generally that, regardless of how much satisfaction the western nations might achieve by thus overruling and snubbing Moscow, the paramount problem—that of preserving the peace—probably had not been moved very far along the road to a solution.

George Polk

Last May, George Polk, CBS correspondent, was taken out on Salonika bay in a boat where he was blindfolded, bound hand and foot and shot through the head. His murderers: Communists. Their motive: Simply to produce a murder, the blame for which might be pinned on the rightist Greek government in order to defame it abroad. Gregory Staktopoulos, Communist Salonika newspaperman, confessed he had witnessed the slaying and implicated three other Greek Communists.

DEFENSE:
Big Budget

World tension had slacked off slightly, but according to President Truman's estimate on next year's defense budget the U. S. doesn't intend to relax its vigilance on that account.

THE MILITARY budget for 1949 will be a neat 14.4 billion dollars—that is, if Mr. Truman's current request doesn't get trimmed. It represents an outlay about two billion dollars higher than the figure at which defense spending is running now.

(It doesn't make any difference whether President Truman won or lost the election. He still was required to prepare budget estimates for the congress convening next January.)

The President said that his defense officials had wanted a budget of around 23 billion dollars for the fiscal year starting July 1, but that he had cut them back to the 14.4 billion figure.

WITH RARE candor he admitted that it would take a Croesus to maintain spending as many billions as the officials wanted. His own aim, Mr. Truman said, was to get a military program the country could pay for.

He added that he hoped eventually to reduce military expenditures to about five to seven billion dollars—a remarkably optimistic statement, coming as it did before the election when he was conceded virtually no chance of being able to control any kind of governmental spending after the first of the year.

ATOM PLANE:
Seven Years?

Look up into the sky in about seven years and you might see an atomic-powered airplane scudding across the clouds. Scientists now think there is a good chance that nuclear-propelled aircraft will be in production by that time.

AN OAK RIDGE scientist, David M. Poole, startled the atom-conscious public with the announcement that the theory of an atom-driven airplane has been worked out to completion and is ready to be translated by engineers into actual plans for such a plane.

The nuclear scientists have thought out a way to tap the power of a mobile atomic pile, Poole said.

The problems ahead are to devise the engine, fuselage and controls and to build a shield to protect the plane's crew.

Poole disclosed that the scientists have made up their minds how to make the best use of the power whose source is the heat generated in an atomic pile.

What kind of engine will be used to chain the tremendous power concentrated in the uranium fuel? The rocket-thrust motor was tried and abandoned, said Poole. Steam turbine, turbo-jet and ram jet all were crossed off.

THE POWER unit will be a "nuclear rocket." Just what a nuclear rocket might be is top-secret information. All anyone can even guess at at this point is that it probably involves a new principle of application of power.

DEFENSE SURVEY

Experts Eye U. S. Mobilization Plans

Top military planners are rushing work to complete a spot-check of United States mobilization requirements by November 15.

The check will disclose whether the United States over-all strategic defense plan makes sense and whether it can be applied readily.

Mobilization experts intend to find out if the requirements listed by the army, navy and air force can be reconciled with one another, and if this nation has the capacity to fill the military's estimated wartime needs.

All this doesn't mean that war is necessarily around the corner. Comprehensive analyses of the strategic blueprint are routine steps in U. S. mobilization planning. However, the spot-check is in line with the faster military tempo these days.

SQUABBLE:
Yugoslavia

Russia continues not only to have great and grievous trouble with the United States and differences of opinion with most of the member countries of the United Nations, but her political rift with the up-start satellite also is growing worse instead of better.

THE TROUBLE originally began within the framework of the Cominform (Communist Information Bureau), the master organization through which Russia controls her satellites, when Marshall Tito said his nation would not bow to the Cominform edict ordering Yugoslavia to make itself a precise model of Soviet Russia in all political and economic aspects.

And in recent weeks the "heresy" of Tito and the central committee of the Yugoslav Communist party has become more absolute and more determined than ever.

THAT holds true despite the fact that Yugoslav Foreign Minister Edward Kardelj has been displaying firm adherence to the position of the Russian bloc in the United Nations general assembly arguments.

WALLACE:
On to '52

Henry Wallace, the incorrigibly incorrect visionary, who stumped the political experts by getting his Progressive party on the ballots of 43 states, now is working hard to keep his party alive for the 1952 campaign.

In a pre-election speech in Detroit he criticized "doubters" who argue that although a new party is needed, it shouldn't be formed until 1949.

WHILE Wallace didn't name any names he obviously was referring to the United Auto Workers, headed by Walter Reuther, who had announced plans to form a "genuine" third party of progressive-minded people after the election.

The UAW leadership had condemned the Wallace third party as a Communist-inspired movement and supported President Truman for re-election.

IN THE waning days of the campaign Wallace was appealing to his followers to stick with him after November 2. "I hope you are with us all the way after November 2," he told one audience, putting heavy emphasis on the word "after."

"You've got to drive it home to the rank-and-file of the UAW, and all labor: 'Where do we go after November 2?'"

But wherever they were going, it didn't look like Wallace would be in a position to do much guiding.

Coming Event

All the way through the now historical election campaign one thing was sure: Somebody would get to be President. On that theory work was begun last month on stands in front of the Capitol building in Washington which will be used for the inauguration ceremony next January. This odd-angle view was taken from the Capitol dome.

JAPAN:
On the Spot

Lieut. Gen. Robert L. Eichelberger, former military governor of occupied Japan, admitted he might have made a mistake in not leaving the Japanese a few guns for their own protection.

IT BOILS down—as most international difficulties do these days—to a matter of Communism and Communist influences inside the country.

As a matter of fact, said Eichelberger, Communist pressure in Japan and the Far East in general may force the U. S. to carry out a limited rearmament of the Japanese.

"I believe I went too far in disarming the Japanese," he said. "They need a few machine guns and rifles to protect themselves against internal disturbances.

"IF AND when the American army withdraws, the Japanese will have to be given something with which to defend themselves—a strong police force or a small army."

Communist influence in Japan, he said, "is about the same as it is here. They are a nuisance beyond their numerical strength. But it's always the wrong guy that gets the pistols."

ANOTHER GONE:
Nazi General

Former German Field Marshal Walther von Brauchitsch died in the British military hospital at Hamburg, Germany, where he was under guard awaiting trial as a major war criminal.

The British army's announcement of the death did not state the cause. Von Brauchitsch, who was 67 and had been ill for some time, was scheduled to come up for trial in Hamburg in January.

U. S. Presidents Respect Members of Fourth Estate

WASHINGTON.—In this post-election calm which has settled over the domestic political scene, many a vest, shirt, blouse, or slip in the capital conceals a palpitating heart.

What about my government job after the glad (?) New Year?

The regular classified civil servants haven't much to fear. They can't be fired without cause, and no matter how thorough a new administration's housecleaning may be, most of the furniture lands right back where it was before, although here and there, you may at first fail to recognize an old friend in a new slipcover.

Long ago most 100 per cent New Dealers in high places displayed the wisdom which they felt was the better part of valor and vamoosed. Others assumed new colors. Some who had not been too careful previously to keep the right hand from knowing what the left hand was doing gradually began to grow ambidextrous and soon were able to write the lesson on the blackboard without exposing the wedding-ring finger.

Baukhage

There is however one class of permanent Washingtonians which goes on like the brook. But even individuals in this class may find the nature of their daily tasks differing slightly as administrations change. I refer, of course, to the Fourth Estate which now includes commentators (since radio newsmen as well as newspapermen are eligible to the National Press club), thus establishing at least a minimum standard of merit.

Naturally we who cover the White House always wonder what manner of man we are going to have to handle. While a new incumbent is learning the art of getting his name favorably inserted into a Washington dispatch or broadcast we have a chance to learn the care and feeding of the source of news which feeds the news to us.

Once Dewey had a bad reputation in this regard. But then, most candidates are suspect before they start, since it is taken for granted that they all are subject to the disease of presidentitis which affects victims differently.
